CEASE FIRING ORDER IS GIVEN IN DISPUTE AREA

Russian And Japanese Troops Begin to Withdraw

ON WAY TO SETTLEMENT

Both Sides Agree to Stop Fighting, Some Issues Unsettled

Tokyo, Aug. 11—(AP)—The Foreign Office announced a "cease firing" order was given along the disputed Manchoukuo-Siberian frontier today and that both Russian and Japanese forces began preparations to withdraw.

Details of the truce effected in Moscow still were not available here, but the official dispatch received satisfaction with the peaceful settlement.

Domei (Japanese news agency) said that "cheerful silence" prevailed on the front area, broken only by occasional bursts of gunfire (the fireworks of genuine celebration). Each side calmly watched the other retreat.

Short No Man's Land

An agreed hundred yards wide separated the two forces at most points, but they were only 75 yards apart on the slopes of Changkufeng Hill, scene of the most intensive fighting. Japanese troops dispute developed into open conflict July 29.

Following the cease firing order, Domei said, the "chattering" of the Russians was "clearly audible" to the Japanese.

Peaceful Settlement Aim

Moscow, Aug. 11—(AP)— The withdrawal on the Siberian frontier, which threatened to involve Russia and Japan in major hostilities, appeared well on the way to peaceful settlement today.

Both sides agreed to a truce after a peace conference between the Russian Foreign Commissar, Maxim Litvinoff, and the Japanese Ambassador, Mamoru Shigemitsu. They agreed in order their forces to cease military operations at noon today Changkufeng time (11 p.m. Thursday, EDT).

Not all points of the dispute over the frontier position about Changkufeng Hill, centre of trouble since July 29, were cleared up by the agreement—the basis of re-defining the border remained a thorny problem which only could start new quarrels.

The cease train point was settled, however; both sides agreed to stop fighting.

BRITAIN AND U.S. TO USE ISLANDS IN PACIFIC OCEAN

Joint Development of Trans-Pacific Aviation Seen

WORKING AGREEMENT

Hull Says There Are No Commitments on Defence

Washington, Aug. 11—(AP)— A new "working agreement" by use of Canton and Enderbury Islands indicated today that Great Britain and the United States were willing to be partners in the development of trans-Pacific aviation.

The two countries ended four years of joint control over ownership of the mid-Pacific islands yesterday by signing a document to use them jointly as aviation and communication bases.

Secretary Hull denied future consideration, along with the question of ownership, Cordell Hull, United States Secretary of State, said there were no commitments on defence.

WATCH REPAIRS GROW NUMEROUS

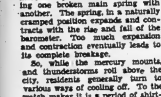
Residents generally may have mistaken perspiration-beaded brows and complained lengthily about the recent hotsian period of summer, but to watchmakers of the city the days of heat and high humidity have become, comparatively disclosed by the mounting pile of wrist and pocket watches observed on the repair bench of one local jeweller this morning.

For the high temperatures take their toll of these delicate mechanisms, and broken main springs and other finely adjusted parts which snap with the heat and moisture, must be repaired.



Not only the heat, but the varying changes in temperature reflect greater business for the watch repair men. Thunderstorms also produce their quota of broken watches.

There's an art to repairing watches during extremes of heat and humidity, carefully explained the repairman. Good grease will until normal weather before replacing one broken main spring with another. The spring is naturally cramped position expands and contracts with the rise and fall of the barometer. Too much expansion and contraction eventually leads to the complete breakage.

So, while the mercury mounts, and thunderstorms roll above the city, residents generally turn to various ways of cooling off. To the watch maker it is a period of unsleeved activity as constant as the weather.

COLD WINTER? DEALER SAYS SO

'After a Hot Summer Look For Cold Winter,' Fuel Man Predicts

Cost companies of the city indulging in a bit of long range weather forecasting, apparently are viewing a barometer which reads "cold, with zero weather predominant", this winter. Though the city has sweltered recently during one of the hottest periods on record, managers of the companies have been engaged in the warm task of securing plenty of tonnage of assorted varieties of coal which is expected to be shipped into Belleville port within the next few weeks. Recently unloadings have been heavy, after a quiet early summer, but business within a short period is expected to increase considerably.

"After such a hot summer we're looking for a cold winter, and when it does come we'll be ready," stated one manager this morning.

BASS CATCHES REPORTED FAIR

Trenton Man Lands Nice Ten And Half Pound Trout

Though plenty of bass are being caught this summer in the Bay of Quinte, favorite fishing spots elsewhere in the district are not being neglected, and fair catches are being registered. Fishing at Consecon this week, D. Donnelly of Toronto caught a three and one-half pound small-mouth bass, which when opened to clean, was found to contain two baby blackbirds. At Percy Boom, just south of Campbellford, Harry Barret of Warkworth, managed to land a fine lunge which tipped the scales at 30 pounds. Wilbert Cory of Trenton, fishing at Bustard's Lake near Northbrook, landed a nice ten and on-half pound trout, and Ralph Carr, Frankford, trolling at Heagle Island, near Frankford, was victor over a 25-pound lunge.

SNEEZING SEASON DRAWS NEAR

Hope in Highlands of North Hastings Says Chamber of Commerce

May fever victims of the city and district are about to enter their annual period of sneezing, snuffling and general discomfort. Dispatches from New York City state that the official season for hay fever begins August 15 and will not end until September 30.

But comfort is given by the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, which is in co-operation with the Hastings County Council in the matter of advertising the benefits of Hastings County, that in the highlands of North Hastings, there may the sufferers relax, content in the fact that this section of the province is one in which immunity is conferred. The absence, comparative absence rather, of ragweed, goldenrod, and other allergic weeds whose pollen brings discomfort to the annual sufferers, makes makes this a paradise for those afflicted, the local Chamber has advised in the past.

The elevation is higher there, also, which apparently has helped sufferers, makes this a paradise tourists from points far south of the border make their pilgrimage to North Hastings where they find comfort from the distressing malady.

SHRAPNEL TAKEN FROM SHOULDER

Sudden Sharp Pain in Shoulder Felt by Sam Johnson

Over twenty-one years after he sustained shrapnel wounds at the battle of Vimy Ridge, Sam Johnson, employee at the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Belleville, felt a sharp pain in his shoulder. Investigation yesterday revealed some foreign substance beneath the shoulder blade and a subsequent operation by Dr. W. W. Tennent revealed the piece of shrapnel, which was removed today.

The piece of shrapnel found its mark in April 1917 during the fierce and now memorable fighting around Vimy Ridge during the Great War. Although wounded and taken to hospital, no trace of a bullet or shrapnel was revealed at that time, although Mr. Johnson knew he had been struck and also realized he was carrying a souvenir of the war in his shoulder. The foreign substance did not occasion him any pain until a recent date, when he fully realized what the trouble was.

His desire to look at "the one with his name on it", as old soldiers termed any piece of shrapnel or bullet, that remained inside a soldier, and could not be removed at the time of the wounding, prompted Mr. Johnson to submit to the operation, which proved highly successful, both Dr. Tennent and Mr. Johnson stated today.

INVINCIBILITY ON EMPIRE TRADE

Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett Says if System Lost Disintegration Result

Calgary, Aug. 11 (CP)—Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett contends that if the family preference system of family trade preference is maintained among the British family in his country will be invincible, but disintegration will set in if the system is lost.

The former Conservative leader told members of the Calgary Conservative Association yesterday that Prime Minister Mackenzie King proposed to give away the family preference privilege, consent to allow United States to trade with Britain on the same basis as Canada so the Dominion could enter the United States' market on a restricted basis.

"If Canada sells out on this basis it will be economic suicide," Mr. Bennett said. He referred to United Kingdom-Canada-United States trade pacts now under negotiation.

Mr. Bennett said such movements as Social Credit and the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation were merely manifestations of wonder by citizens as to why Governments failed to keep pace with progress in science and arts.

Alberta had opened its bobka 23 years ago with not a single debit and he asked if its citizens were proud of their handiwork in intervening years. It is time a business administration is installed in the province, he said.

Mr. Bennett believed the capitalistic system is still the best system but that did not mean it should not be changed.

"Conservatism's job is to determine what changes will be for the better."

Parents have invested money, love and care in their children and are entitled to expect dividends in good character and good citizenship. The great need of the country today is good able men in our government, men who fear God, hate covetousness and love righteousness.

Solomon looked not only backhimself, but upward to God. Onward on his forefathers, inward on distrust in the world today are due to men and nations leaving God out of the picture and trusting to their own resources, navies, armies and air forces.

INVENTION AND THE FUTURE

Inventions are playing so dominant a part in life that they have given man a great deal of thought, especially in the past few years. While invention piled up production faster than man could use it and hence faster than work was necessary to keep it up, even in the last few years the progress of invention has been steady until today there are more devices in use than there ever were in the records of man. Many other inventions wait.

Ideas have been expressed as to how to deal with this problem but so far little is seen of the result of these suggestions. The time has not come when the proper adjustment has been reached or even approached. That is the great problem—the means to make this adjustment.

proposal was made by Professor C.

Yesterday in London, England, a E. M. Joad, of the creation of a board of men of science and philosophy, empowered to give or refuse permits for inventions likely to affect human life. This proposal was laid before a teachers' summer school meeting.

He said, "Science has given us powers fit for gods, yet we bring to their use the mentality of schoolboys and savages. The symbol of this is the airplane, the greatest of man's inventions which nevertheless threatens his civilization with destruction.

"The superman made the airplane but the ape has got hold of it.

"Now, if we put thrillers, insert coins into metal slots, scan headlines, crowd through clicking turnstiles, turn on the radio, hurl ourselves over the surface of the earth in a mechanism propelled by petrol, we substitute the modern notion of entertainment.

"Men of genius by the dozen, men of talent by the hundred labored in order that the radio might be. A miracle was performed, but with what result?

"Science, in short, has provided in abundance the means to the good life, but it has not taught us how to live."

Man has made them as Prof. Joad says. But man in the mass has got hold of them. Nations have not the wisdom to control them and that is to live and let live and so some of them armed themselves with the latest in death-dealing devices and forced others to arm for self-protection and security and thus is diverted a vast section of the energies of the whole of the world, to what in the ideal state, if there can be such, would be waste to a large extent.

Who is going to recover control of these forces which have spread among the races and individuals of mankind? and who is then going to control them for man's betterment. The proposed board creates a dilemma. Who is going to have the final say as to the advantage or disadvantage of an invention? As Prof. Joad says, the inventors of radio did not intend all its present results and manifestations for it can be used for many ends and the flying machine can to save and help or to destroy. And who is to have the power to enforce the decisions of such a board? Everything will have to be backed by public opinion, not of one country only but across the surface of the globe.

The western world which 'went' practical and inventive has done much for the race, but it has created such practical results in some of its inventions that it is no wonder Prof. Joad and thousands of others tremble for the future.

'CHURCH HAS THINGS TO SAY'

In an appeal for church attendance during the summer months, Rev. Dr. David W. Norton of Marlboro, Mass., echoed the proposal advanced two years ago by Rev. Dr. Frederick Fleming for a moratorium on sermons. Many clergy, he said would welcome a sermon moratorium in midsummer. He went on to say:

"There are many Sundays in July and August when we cannot honestly say, 'I think it would be nice to go to church today'," he said. "It wouldn't be nice. It would be far nicer to go to the country or the beach or even to stay at home and read the paper and listen to the radio.

"Then we must say, 'Today I must go, as a faithful son of the church, to worship God in His house.' And let me tell you a secret. The clergy often feel just as you do, especially about preaching. In April and May it is easy enough to find subjects for sermons. The great events of Easter and Ascension furnish them in plenty. But in July and August it is not so easy.

"Many of us would like to declare a moratorium. But we realize that the church has things to say, less exciting but

"And if we would walk and not faint in the difficulties and discouragements of life we must renew it by waiting on Him. What does this waiting mean? It means keeping open between our souls and God all the lines of communication by which He can speak to us and give us of His boundless strength."

MY SONG

I'll sing a song of Summer, and the gay, bright wildflowers blooming;
To nights when moonlight bathes the lake
in iridescent sheen;
I'll sing my song of morning mists, and far horizons looming.
And quiet fields, and country lanes and pools where birches lean.

I'll build my song of thistledown, so carefree, lightly blowing;
I'll build it of the lovers' words soft-whispered in the gloom;
I'll build it of the sunrise in its first faint colours glowing,
And eventide, with light that gleams from some small cottage room.

I'll shape my song from breezes blown from nowhere into nowhere;
I'll shape it from the rosebuds and the clover and the grain;
I'll pattern it from flecks of clouds, and shadows on my lawn chair,
And dream filled hours, and sun filled days, and pattering of rain.

I'll take my song of Summer, when I've put it all together,
And give it for the singing to all the winds that blow,
That East and West and South and North,
in every clime and weather
You'll hear my Summer song to you no matter where you go.

CHARLIE CHAN IS DEAD in the person of Warner Oland, screen actor who has been portraying the role of Charlie Chan, Chinese detective, for some years with great success. Charlie Chan, actual Chinaman, was born in the mind of clever author, and the borning brought that author money in great gobs and large denominations. He placed Charlie Chan on the police force of Honolulu as a plain clothes detective, and endowed him with penetrating deductive, deductive, or what have you, powers. Charlie Chan could see farther through a knot hole than a boy could through a barn door, or disclose the migratory birds.

The point is that opening of season on Sept. 15 does not find the birds from our large breeding grounds in the west in any shape as they are not down at this date. Here in this district is only a few miles north of us here and where on the 15th the shooting is allowed on Sept. 15 was established by Mr Hepburn, shortly before the season opened last year and a few weeks before the election.

Open Duck Season

August 10, 1938.
R. R. Carrying Place, Ont.
Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir:

A few years ago the Department of Game and Fisheries still further curtailed the open season in which it would be legal to take wild ducks by lasting off two weeks' at the start, changing the date from Sept. 15 to Oct. 1. This change came after other drastic curtailments along with the game laws. Notice of this late fine sportsman John Townson of Toronto, ornithologist for the Toronto Globe was the father of this change, giving as his main reason that the weather was likely to be warm when game would spoil. In my opinion this was not sufficient reason for the cutting off of two weeks' from the open season. Game will often spoil in October and even November if not taken care of. Cold storage is now available if a shooter wishes to keep his ducks through the period of his holiday. At the time of the change the Minister of the Department wrote that old timer at the sport and my friend of many years, Mr. James B. Anderson of Mountain View for his opinion. James R. Anderson showed me the Editor's letter and told me what he had said in reply. He simply said cutting off two weeks' would likely save a few ducks and that over the past fifty years he could notice a considerable decrease in water fowl. The writer has been highly interested in duck shooting for 55 years and agrees with Mr. Anderson as to the migratory birds, fall ducks, red head, blue bills, canvas back, etc. but not as to our local bred ducks, black ducks, mallard, teal, etc. Over years of close observance in many marshes in this vicinity, am strongly of the opinion these marsh ducks are more than holding their own. Mr. Anderson's opinion was given as to the migratory birds.

Leonard Phillips, Conaconi: "I never get any ducks afetch the first day the refers to black ducks; they have mostly left and only a few old stockraisers left—try and get them."

James R. Wallbridge, Huff's Island: "Oh Oct. 1 the rice is all down in deep water and cannot be reached by the hucks, they have gone other places. The present Act is OK if they give us Sept. 15 the same as north of the new Ottawa Highway."

Scott Hutchinson, Barcovan Beach: "I am all for opening day Sept. 15. Last year's thought September there was lots of ducks by Oct. 1 they had all gone."

Rupert Bonter, Weller's Bay: "Give us the same as the other counties when we will be satisfied with the present Act with all its curtailments and gun licence."

Fred Cooper, Gardenville: "I do not see any difference in the ducks. I am 49 and lived on Weller's Bay all my life—treat us like the other fellow."

Harry Day, Belleville: The young ducks decoy better on Sept. 15, —broods are scattered by Oct. 1— On this reason a few ducks might be saved by having the opening date Oct 1—it means little difference. We all should be treated alike (valuable opinion)

Russell Smith, Belleville: "Opening day Sept. 15 and leave the Act like it is. We are not being treated fairly."

Harry Kimber, General Manager, The Globe & Mail, Toronto: "I shot on Sept. 15 last year and came back thoroughly convinced the same opening date should be uniform and mentions Oct. 1. I do not agree with Mr. Kimber as to Oct. 1, Sept. 15 is the correct date for our local ducks to be taken. These local ducks with their broods have been on the wing since the last week in July. By Sept. 15 they are full grown and in good condition. By Oct. 1 they have scattered other feeding grounds by necessity. They have left on their way south."

Every man interviewed was strongly of the opinion we are being badly used south of this division and Sept. 15 has it. We request the influence of The Ontario Journal know it to be only for fairness in all matters. We overlooked Fred Crose, Belleville in the above opinions. This was most emphatic. Sept. 15 is late enough for our local marsh ducks. Our good friends to the south are getting most of our black ducks by the two weeks' makes no difference to the ducks that come from the north. The black ducks have plenty of protection."

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton M.D.

The Cause of Much of Our Tiredness

A patient visited a physician and complained of a tired feeling all the time. After a careful examination he advised him to visit his dentist and bring back a report as to the condition of his teeth including an Xray examination. When the patient returned with a statement from the dentist that there was no infection of the teeth or gums, the physician simply turned to the patient and said, "Suppose you tell me the whole story. I find no cause for your tiredness nor does your dentist, so that your tiredness is not due to organic trouble of any kind. You have something on your mind, something that has you thinking most of the day and part of the night. It is this constant thinking—worrying or puzzling on your brain—that is keeping you constantly tired. And until you get it settled in some way you will remain tired."

Tiredness is sometimes said to be due to overwork but it may be the worry about the work, not the work itself that causes the tiredness and if the individual cannot adjust himself nicely to his work, that the constant upsetting of this lack of adjustment is going to keep him tired.

Dr. O. K. Wharton, London, Ontario, in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, in speaking of the fatigue syndrome or the sex of symptoms we call tiredness, says:

"Worry, not work, kills. Frequently overwork suggests a neglected condition. Unfitness, satisfactorily upsets the mental balance of a person and leads to fatigue. Insecurity of home affections, health, or employment becomes a powerful emotional stimulus producing fatigue. Fear and worry from whatever cause point in the same direction. It is well known that any emotional excess produces exhaustion. Unhappiness, dissatisfaction, frustration, a feeling of lack of purpose in life or in incompleteness, lead to a chronic lessening of energy. Indecision is a great waster of energy."

It will be noticed that no mention of gland juices as a cause, or condition is made of excess thyroid or fatigue.

The thought then is that if after examination by physician and dentist, there is no organic reason for being tired all the time, one should take a look in on one's self-centered attitude, indecision, and other emotions—as a likely cause.

Current issue of a weekly edition of The Times, London, England, in a special "Canada Colour Number" devotes considerable space to an interesting description of the City of Belleville, which it terms the gateway to other Ontario cities for special mention.

The description starts off in arresting type beside that of an advertisement of the city authorities in the magazine, "The Belleville City Council some time ago is headed, "Belleville, the Gateway to Central Ontario." The text is:

Situated midway between Toronto and Montreal, on the northern shore of the beautiful Bay of Quinte, an inlet of Lake Ontario that separates the island county of Prince Edward from the mainland, where the historic Moira River empties its waters, the City of Belleville, Ontario, occupies a beneficiently upsets the mental balance of a person and leads to fatigue. # Dark Sheer Frock Is Ideal For City Sightseeing

For sightseeing wear this black and white geometric print silk chiffon dress with pleated jacket.

LOUISE CAMPBELL
Has a well-developed, shapely figure

By HELEN POLLETT

THREE WARM days in town call in stentorian tones for dark sheer frocks. If you attend the August sales you may be able to find something like the one shown here —which has excellent style points and may be worn on many an occasion at ithrough the fall and winter.

For now it is ideal for sightseeing in town. It is a black and white geometric print silk chiffon with a pleated apron front panel, short sleeves and high round neck, banded with white piqué.

The short, square, pleated jacket is sleeveless.

Hat Felt or Straw

The large hat, with its dipped brim, may be either straw or felt. Gloves and bag are white to match the piqué trimming of the dress.

The first fall dresses are black, according to New York stores, which are displaying them. They are worn with quantities of jewelry. Most of these dresses are made of cloky rayon crepes. Surface interest in fabrics is outstanding this season, these raised patterns which are part of the weave, being especially pliable and easily draped.

Soft, flounced frocks in velvet are most flattering in black and soft smoky gray tones. The smoky grays are just as delightful background for jewelry as are the blacks.

Here's How Thin Girls Add Weight

can put on 15 pounds or more in a few months. Many are thankful in her quest for a curvier shape, now give hope because its scales don't report a gain in a few days' time.

If emaciation is caused by lack of fresh air and exercise necessary to create a normal appetite, they must be a regular period of mild muscle workout every day. Rowing and swimming are highly recommended. Horseback riding is good. Tennis is strenuous but all right if not long continued. A brisk walk will increase circulation, airwash the lungs, provide an interest in steak and onions.

A quart of milk a day, with a little cream added, will provide the too-slender body with man-/ food elements that are necessary for repair work. Cereal, served with cream and sugar, will create a fuller bust, well-shaped legs and neatly-rounded arms. A few bonbons after dinner will provide energy-building material.

Long hours of sleep are imperative. It is then that fat cells multiply. When the slim lassie gets herself to normal weight, she will not only look better but she will feel better, have more realization find life more zestful.

Sweetheart Tells Lies, Boy States

Girl Says She Told Truth—He Won't Believe It

By VIRGINIA LEE

"DEAR MISS LEE: For six years I have been going with a girl. I am 24 and she 22. During all this time we have been in each other's company constantly. In the past six months she got a position, and due to it, I believe it has gone to her head. If so happens it's the first responsible position she ever had.

"Recently I found her out in a terrible lie, which has hurt me very much. It seems she had been transferred to another place and on her way she met a fellow working who offered to take her to where she had to go. When she returned she had an odor of drink on her and got home very late. I asked her where she was. She told me a different tale altogether.

I called the office and know she didn't go back to work at all.

Accused of Transgressing

"I have accused her of wrongdoing, which she has denied emphatically. Why won't she tell me the truth? I have always been faithful and honest with her. Miss Lee, I love this girl very much, and nothing in the world can make me give her up. I know she isn't tired of me. She has told me so. I must have this misunderstanding straightened out, and I can't seem to do it. I have asked her so you the truth to me, but she claims she has. I'm not stubborn, but I know it's a lie as it came on good authority. GARY."

I don't know what I can do about it, Gary. I can't make the girl change her story to help you to believe her. You MAY be misled, you know. I can't see why she would deliberately lie to you and stick to it unless she was afraid you would throw her over if she told you the truth. Parents sometimes make liars and cheats out of their children by insisting they tell the truth and then punishing them severely for it. They learn after awhile that it is wiser to lie and take the risk of the lie being found out.

Better drop the whole thing, my boy. If she is lying you never will arrive at the truth by pestering her with questions and then not believing her answers. You are getting nowhere fast with such a course. Make up your mind to believe her, or, at least, if you can't do that, keep the doubt in your own heart. Trust her and love her. The truth will out eventually if she is not afraid of you, but knowing you will be understanding no matter what she does. Isn't it possible, too, that there is a little jealous god prodding you into this doubt of your sweetheart?

"You'll love this way of protecting DAINTINESS" says JOAN BLONDELL

I always use Lux Toilet Soap as a bath soap, too," says Joan Blondell. And clever girls everywhere keep skin sweet the Hollywood way. Lux Toilet Soap's ACTIVE lather removes stale perspiration, dust and dirt thoroughly. Leaves skin fragrant—appealing!

An early appearance is promised for brown fur jackets to be worn with autumn frocks. A typical model is a finger-tip boxy model of brown Alaska seal, with a spiral treatment of the big sleeves and very narrow satin insets between the fur sections.

Always in the lead is the beautifully cut and draped frock of lame. A beauty, for formal evening events, is of gold cloth made with wide bands of the lame crossing on both the front and back of long narrow sleeves. Very deep de- the bodice to form the tops of the collarless back and front.

How to Wash Lace

Lace will always be the aristocrat of fashion, but when it comes to summertime dresses even the sheerest of cobwebby meshes take on a very practical turn. Since laces are such a standby for travel and vacation wardrobes, laundering is one of the essential factors, and most of the new ones are up to it!

Cotton lace dresses, which are so popular for town and sports wear, can be washed with soap and water like any other cotton frock. But even the finer fabrics made of silk or rayon thread, or combinations of the two, will be all the better for a tubbing before their freshness is impaired and their strength ruined by soil.

Fine lace frocks need gentle handling certainly, but an extra quantity of mild lukewarm soapsuds to take the place of rubbing, and several clean lukewarm rinses do the trick. After rolling in a towel for a moment to absorb the excess moisture, they should be ironed under a thin cloth to prevent the fabric from stretching or the motif from being disturbed.

TODAY'S GARDEN-GRAPH

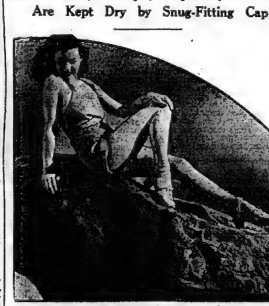
Written by DEAN HALLIDAY

For Central Press Canadian

Gardners are constantly on the lookout for new varities of plants and new ideas for gardening. If you are planning strawberries this fall, you might experiment with at least half of your crop, planting the other half as usual.

As shown in the Garden-Graph the strawberries are planted with the crowns set well under the soil surface, a method by which fruit growers claim to get best results.



After planting, do not allow the plants to become weak from lack of moisture.

Crown rot means a real dialster if it comes in contact with delphinium plants. Remove the diseased plants entirely and burn them. Then pour a bichloride of mercury solution (two tablets to a quart of water) into the ground from which the diseased plants were taken. Do not set new plants in the same location until the treatment has had time to destroy the disease in the soil.

HEED THESE HINTS FOR KEEPING COOL

Dip in Briny Helps, Especially if Curls Are Kept Dry by Snug-Fitting Cap

Susan Hayward
Shows one good way of keeping cool.

By JULIET SHELBY

Central Press Writer on Beauty

THERE ARE plenty of long, warm days still ahead of you, so this department is pausing along a few more hints that may prove helpful.

The days of fancy headgear for swimming are definitely over. You probably get a cap for just one thing, and that is to keep your hair dry. So take a few minutes off when you stop to buy one and try it on. See how it feels on you. If it is too large water will get in and soak your hair, no matter how thick and waterproof the cap may be. If it is too small it will make your head hot and your scalp unperspire. Either way the result is that your hair gets wet. And it's surprising how quickly even a wave and makes your hair dull and sticky. So get a cap that's snug and fits smoothly around the rim. If you want to be extra careful you can get a piece of chamois with two strings attached and tie it around your head under your cap. Since it is waterproof it will be a big help in keeping just don't seem to be able to keep a bit of water from coming in then it's a good idea to pack two or three little curlers in your beach kit to take care of the little wisps of hair that may become uncurled.

Put Them in Curlers

Another thought is to put these ends up in curlers and then don your cap so that when you come out of the water all you will have to do is to take off your cap and sit in the sun until your hair is dry. Then you can comb the curls out into well managed little ringlets.

To avoid that glaring white line at the edge of your hair and the rage of your neck that is so prominent after you have gotten the rest of your skin a lovely tan, tie your hair up high on the top of your head. This will give the sun a chance to color your skin into your hairline.

If you prefer a shower to cool you off and refresh you after a long, hot day, then here's a suggestion: Cover your body with a liquid soap before you take your shower. When the warm water

Have you a member of your family without teeth—temporarily, of course? I have right now, and I made out a list of things he could eat. Plenty of milk and fruit juice, of course, and eggs in all ways, vegetables that can be mashed fine and seasoned with butter. Soup, of course. Fruit that can be pureed—rubbed through a strainer after it is cooked—like apple sauce, apricots, peaches, pears. Cooked cereals for breakfast, orange juice, milk toast with bread crusts cut off or soft bread and egg yolks cooked soft or hard and mashed.

Today's Recipes

CHEESE SAUCE —One tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, mixed smooth; one cup milk, season with one-fourth teaspoon salt and a sprinkling of paprika. Cook until smooth and then add one-half cup finely cut or grated cheese and cook slowly until cheese is melted. The cream sauce for the milk gravy can be made the same way, omitting the cheese.

FACTS AND FANCIES

Hurry-up Dessert

Hurry-up dessert suggestion: Toast sponge or angel food cake slices. Spread thin with preserved fruit or jam. Surround several cut bananas, berries or oranges. If you have a supply of shredded coconut on hand toast some of that and sprinkle a little over the top of each dessert.

Bad for Linoleum

Soap which contains free alkali will injure linoleum, paint and varnish, as well as wool, silk and delicate fabrics, because they all contain oil.

Unusually Bright Tot Is Problem

Not Easy to Be Good Parent to Him Says Psychologist

By GARRY C. MYERS, PH. D.

Head Department Parent Education, Cleveland College, Western Reserve University.

IT IS NOT easy to be a good parent of a very bright child. Many a young child with unusual intelligence has a hard life ahead of him. He may lack humility when he needs it most, and later suffer from excessive feelings of inferiority. He never may learn how to be likeable, but be destined to a life of loneliness. Nevertheless, if his parents and teachers have the necessary wisdom, skill and character to help him learn to get on happily with others of his age, he may live a lovable and happy life.

I have a notion the mother who writes the following about her boy of six will do pretty well:

"He has been read to since he was four, and through his reading has acquired such a fund of general information that he is advanced much beyond the first grade. He is not a genius nor a prodigy, but he is an unusually bright and alert child with an insatiable curiosity. He began talking before he was a year old. At two he knew all his story books by heart, and when we tired of reading them to him he would sit and listen intently while we read a chapter or so from whatever book we happened to be reading at the time, whether Hemingway or Huxley.

Wanted to Read

"When he was three he began pestering me to teach him to read. At first I refused, because I had been a teacher in both the public and private schools and had become pretty disgusted with what meant 'learning to read.' However, in self-defense I finally bought a primer for him. By summer, when he was four, he was through the nursery tales. That fall I sent him to a small private kindergarten and he spent a very happy year there. He plays well with other youngsters his own age.

"He spells almost any common word or words of regular phonetic composition. He has read and reread all the common fairy tales. (Hansel and Gretel is his favorite.) The Peter Rabbit stories, Little Black Sambo, the Uncle Wiggily books, Milne's 'Winnie the Pooh' and 'House at Pooh Corner's,' abridged stories of Robinson Crusoe, Rip Van Winkle, King Arthur, and '100,000 Whys.' Bible story book, etc. . . . .

"Whenever he sees me idle he will corner me with, 'Now mother, tell me something that you know that I don't know,' and he furnishes a beginning by saying, for example, 'Well, there's a street car. I know it's made of steel, but I don't know what steel is. So tell me all about steel.' And he soon exhausts my small knowledge. For Christmas he received a 'Modern Encyclopedia for Children' and he pores over it, augmenting it with gleanings from adults who set him simply 'people who know things that he doesn't know.'

"We do not want him pushed beyond his social age, but do not think it wise to enter him in the grade in the crowded public schools."

Since this mother lives near Ohio State university, I advised her to enter her lad in its elementary school.

Tufted Linen Crisp, Cool

By Content Press

IN THE DOG DAYS the trick is not only to feel cool, but to look as cool and composed as possible.

The dress worn here by Frances Mercer, the young film player, gives this desirable impression.

It was designed by Renie, of Hollywood, and shows a definite influence of the 1890's.

It is made of white silk linen, with tufts of navy candlewicking, to provide an effective trim on the broad-shouldered sleeves, high neck and circular skirt.

The narrow belt is navy, and the hat, gloves, bag and shoes are white.

Diagnosis Sometimes Mistaken

Doctor's Prognosis of Allergy Not Always Correct

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

DOCTORS ARE apt as anybody to run things. I do the ground. When a new idea comes out in medicine, there are those who begin to specialize in it, and for a while they think that every symptom on earth can be ascribed to one cause. As time goes on more sensible ideas begin to prevail.

It is a good sign then to have a report from the allergy society reporting mistakes in diagnosis by the allergists themselves.

Allergy came into fashion a few years ago, and has been made much of. It is a state of hypersensitiveness on the part of some individuals to dusts, flower dusts, animal dandruff and foods. A typical example of it is hay fever. The allergic person is sensitive to the pollens from certain plants, mostly ragweed. The start of an even though we are breathing the same pollens as the hay-fevertic, are not affected. But because the allergic to ragweed pollen, as soon as even the slightest bit gets in the air, he sneezes and sniffles and weeps.

Allergy as a state of the body undoubtedly exists and causes a variety of conditions, including asthma and many kinds of skin eruption. These facts are proved everybody who has studied the question agrees to the allergic nature of hay fever, asthma and hives. Infantile eczema in most instances also belongs in this category.

Some Controversial Matters

But there are some controvers'al matters; for instance, the intestinal and gall bladder troubles, but setsitting substances, particularly foods, cause a spasm of the intestinal muscles or gall bladder muscles and thus produce symptoms? There is no reason why they can't. Sensitizing substances affect particularly smooth muscle —asthma is due to a spasm of the smooth muscles of the bronchial tubes. And the intestines and gall bladder have smooth muscles in their coats. No, there is no reason why such allergy should not exist, but does it?

Many allergy specialists have said it does. And they have often pointed to remarkable cases where more conservative doctors have made a diagnosis of gallstones and then the patient was cured of his discomforts by removing certain foods from his diet.

It is quite a reversal, then, and a sign of honest thinking, to have an allergist, Dr. Alexander of Cleveland, report on some cases in which the shoe is on the other foot. In these patients, the allergists diagnosed allergy and something else. Each time in one, point over the right upper abdomen was called allergy to wheat, but gallstones were found at operation. In another, allergic asthma was diagnosed, but a hidden goiter pressing on a bronchial tube was the real cause of the distress. In still another, the heart, not pollina, was proved to be responsible for a case of asthma. Many reports indicate a healthy state of mind.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

"Chris?"

"Yes."

"It's Beverly."

That old tightening of the throat, an inability to speak when suddenly moved, kept Chris silent, and she said, "Are you still there, Chris?"

"I suppose I'll always be here when you need me, my dear. Is anything wrong?"

"No. That is—Chris, you're not angry with me, are you?"

"Angry? Never. I want you to be happy in your own way. And if that didn't happen to be my way—"

"And you're all right?"

"Fine. Even busy."

She said nothing to that, and it struck him suddenly that she was crying.

"See here, my darling," he said, "if you're not sure of this marriage, it's not too late. Be very sure of yourself before you go ahead. Don't make a mistake."

She did not answer that, and once again she seemed to be waiting for something, although she realised that only later.

"Look here," he said, "you're tired and nervous. I'm going to send you something to give you a night's sleep. You'll take it, won't you?"

"Yes," she said in a small voice. "You're sure you'll all right?"

"Perfectly."

"Then good-night, Chris. And—good-bye."

He was pale but collected when he walked to the drugstore and sent her the promised tablets. But he took one himself when they were being measured out.

Beverly married Jerry Ames the next afternoon in a blaze of sunlight in the garden; a Jerry who, along with his bride, blinked at the glare with eyes slightly congested from the bachelor party the night before. Beverly was white but composed. Nearby was the place where Chris had spent her breaking her heart a year before and had caught her in his arms. She did not look at it, however, and her voice was steady when she made her promises during the ceremony. She liked Jerry. They would grow together. And she had her father's stubbornness. She had agreed to do this thing. Now she was doing it.

The next morning's paper showed pictures of her in her wedding finery, standing at the end of the green alley, with the fountain behind her and Jerry beside her. She was smiling faintly into the camera.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Cassey was killed that summer, run down by the Lewis car. He was romping with another dog in the street, Chris said later, running well above the city speed limit, went over Cassey. Went on without stopping, too, leaving Chris to carry in the faithful creature that had loved him so. Later to give him decent burial under a tree in the back yard.

Lily did not dare to speak to him that day, and she told Alma to take her late on over the back fence that he was acting very queer, and that he had probably a fit over the dog. She was dosing in her chair late that afternoon when Chris, having seen the Lewis car on its way home, deliberately put on his hat and started out the back. He was tight-lipped as he entered the driveway. He did not go to the house, but circled around it as he came to the garage, and there confronted the Lewis chauffeur, a big man, kicking his tires and smoking a cigarette.

The man knew trouble when he saw it coming. He threw away the cigarette.

"You killed my dog today," said Chris.

"Yeah? Why didn't you keep it out of the street?"

"Killed it and went on," said Chris inexorably.

"You and your damn dog! If you're looking for trouble, you've come to the right place."

"That's precisely what I'm looking for," said Chris, and hauled off with a straight right which landed on the chauffeur's jaw.

Five minutes later he picked up his hat and departed. He was considerably battered, but felt better than he had for days. The fact that he had left his opponent sitting on the cement floor, groggy and bloody, was comforting. Some of the accumulated fury of days and weeks had exploded during the battle.

As a matter of fact Chris, having had his best to forget her that summer. Alone on hot nights he was quietly preparing for Europe and study on Letitia's five thousand dollars. He was freshening his college German, and even studying a small phrase book of common medical terms. He was reading surgery again, also, and spending time in the operating room watching other men work. Katie, on the operating-room staff now, would see him coming in with that eager thrust of the shoulders as if his mind were traveling ahead of his body, and would watch him surreptitiously. When he smiled at one of the other nurses, she would grow hot with jealousy.

It was in August that he took off Scotty's finger.

"It'll go to go, Scotty."

"Go ahead, but I'd like to save the hand."

But Chris, with the X-ray man on the table, surveyed the dirty and burned tissues and knew that eventually the hand would go also.

"Why don't you quit, Scotty?"

"It's all I know. I can't let my family starve."

One day, however, quite unexpectedly into the X-ray room, he found Scotty practising writing with his left hand. Neither man said anything, and Scotty put his paper aside and showed him his fish in the aviarcon. Lately he had taken up the raising of small tropical fish as a hobby. They required considerable care, and Chris surmised that by filling his leisure they helped him.

Ursula Martin's boy was born early in the fall. Chris attended her himself. She had insisted on going into the ward. Now and then he saw her there, rocking among the cribs and chairs and awaiting the miracle of birth. At times when the nurses were busy he would find her holding some fretful baby, and would marvel at the tenderness in her face.

She was still calm when preparing for her labor. She took down her long, heavy hair and braided it, and walked quietly to the delivery room when the time came.

It was a hot day, and the birth was slow and difficult. Chris, leaning over her after it was over, was dripping with sweat. But she was smiling.

"A boy!" she said feebly. "I wanted a boy. I shall call him for you, Doctor."

He put the child down in the crib. "Then I'll keep an eye on him for you," he said. "We'll make a good job of him, Ursula."

She looked happier after that. She could depend on him. She had felt weak and alone. Now she was not alone. And Chris, stooping in Miss Nettie's room on the way out, told her a little of the story.

"She wanted the child," he said, "and now she has it. The father will pay her something, so that's all right. But I'd like to see that some one knows about her while I'm away, in case of trouble."

"You know who the father is?"

"I know," he said briefly, and she knew him.

"You are an incurable sentimentalist, Chris," she told him. "What on earth is the girl to do with a baby? You haven't you enough on your hands without her?"

But she agreed, and he left more easy in his mind. Later on he told Ursula, and she thanked him gravely.

"But there will be no trouble, Doctor," she said. "I'm strong, and I can work."

"And you won't make any trouble?"

"Why should I?" I have my baby."

The next morning he saw in the paper that the Jervis Ames's had returned from their honeymoon and were to live in the Lewis house. Beverly had come home—Mrs. Jerry, of course—to Holmes sitting at the door, to her father, formal but apparently pleased, in his study, with new theories on the walls and flowers everywhere. She was not unhappy. Jerry loved her, after the honeymoon, had no feeling of belonging to him, or indeed to anybody, even to her father. That small, dapper man, cool and aloof and obsessed with his own affairs, seemed to her now an absurd figure around whom to bury build a furious loyalty; and looking at him over the long length of the handsome dinner table that night she, beautiful and self-control, she knew suddenly that she had thrown away the substance of living for this shadow, arrogant in his dinner clothes, critical of his meal, fussy with the service.

"Hurry up, Holmes! Get some food in here."

"Yes, sir. In a moment, sir."

The footman hurrying in, Holmes impassive, Jerry hungry and drinking her much champagne, found herself alone in her mother's place, isolated from them both, from them all.

"That's your fourth glass, Jerry. And you had a lot at luncheon."

"Don't come home from a wedding ship every day, honey."

Sitting there in the candlelight, with her arms and neck bare and her hair dressed high, she had faced her situation with her usual honesty. Beverly knew that if she did not love Jerry, she was fond of him. He was cheerful. He sang in his bath, whistled while dressing. If his superabundant vitality was irritating at times, there were others when she was grateful for it. And he was proud of her. On that trip of theirs he had found friends in the most unlikely places, and immediately plan a party and survey her carefully after she had dressed for it.

"You're lovely. Very lovely, sweetheart."

He kissed her passionately, and she would do her best to respond. But it was acting, and he knew it. She had never really loved her. He would release her and go away, drinking a cocktail or two to his sense of failure. Even after three months of marriage he was still courting her, she knew, still trying to win herself.

Sitting there playing with her food, she wondered just what there was to hold the three of them together, her father, Jerry, and herself. For years her mother had sat where she was sitting. Had she wondered that, too? She could remember long silences at the table, broken only by the stealthy movement of the men who served the food. Now even Jerry seemed daunted. He caught her alone in the hall after dinner and grinned at her.

"Cheery little meal, eh?" he said. "Are they all like that?"

"Pretty much. You'll get used to it."

"Will I? Not if I can help it. Let's get the car and go somewhere."

"Our first evening at home?"

"What can we do here? Sit and twiddle our thumbs?"

In the end, they went. They would always be going somewhere, she thought and she got a wrap. He was tireless, filled with animal energy. His cheerfulness was a part of that vitality of his, and already she knew that it she did not go, he would go alone, and she was determined to make her marriage a success. She had paid a high price for it. It must succeed.

Neither of them knew, that first night of their return, that at the upper ward in the hospital Jerry's son was lying in his mother's arms, and that she was holding him almost savagely to her breast.

Beverly was both Chris and Jerry's child before they left the hospital. She had taken over the mother's work of making layettes for the babies in the obstetrics ward, sitting in the garden taking her fine stitches or cutting flannel into absurdly tiny garments. She dreamed no dreams attaching there on bright autumn days. Rance when she hulled herself once at once with her needle. This was her life, the only life she had ever known, or, she thought, she ever would know.

When she had finished her first layette, she took it to the hospital, substituting good goods for baby pieces. She was startled to find Katie Walters there, very neat and competent, and she was aware that she was being subjected to close inspection from head to foot.

"I brought some clothes," she said, "My mother always did it, and so I would like—"

"We're glad to get them, Mrs. Ames," said Katie. "It's only the living here, but I'll take them if you like."

Beverly glanced around the ward. Her mother had known how to greet these women, had moved smilingly from bed to bed, admired the babies, talked to the waiting figures in the rocking chairs. She did not know how to begin, but in a bed nearby lay a girl with a child on her arm, and Beverly—and Katie—moved toward her. For an instant then the three of them here together, Ursula smiling with her baby beside her and her long brown braids on the pillows; Beverly shy and rather at a loss, and Katie, businesslike and alert, saying:

"Let Mrs. Ames see the baby, Ursula. Then "I have to take him away."

"It's a beautiful baby," said Beverly, and was instantly conscious that the girl in the bed had frozen into immobility. It was curious. She felt more shy than ever. Is it a boy?"

"A boy," said Ursula out of stiff lips. "Maybe you'd better take him now, Miss Walters. I think I'll go to sleep."

Beverly felt rebuffed. She moved away, puzzled and bewildered. In the next bed, Vera Lee was trying to remember that look on Ursula Martin's face as Beverly handed it with a thrill of pity. She, and Katie, and that girl in the bed—all together for one brief moment and then going on, separating, forgetting. That each would influence the other for better or worse, for the remainder of their lives.

Theatres

AT THE BELLE

"Son of a Sheik"

The greatest lover in moving picture history, who established his right to that designation in the silent film days, and whose tradition never has been challenged effectively since, is seen once more on a Belle screen, starting today. The Belle Theatre proudly presents a revival of "Son of a Sheik," last film to be made by the beloved Rudolph Valentino.

In this story of primitive emotions, lurid adventure, and a wonderful love in the desert, the actor whose name still follows, elevated to the point of fanaticism, plays two roles, a powerful sheik of the Sahara, and his handsome son, who succeeds him. Set in the picturesque regions of rolling sands and daring horse-men the story adopted from E. M. Hull's well-known novel of the same name, provides full opportunity for the camera to catch many colorful backgrounds, as well as the intensely dramatic moments and beautiful love scenes that brought everlasting fame to the star.

The film, directed by George Fitzmaurice, will be shown in its entirety silent version just as it was released in 1926, shortly after Valentino's tragic death, except that it will be accompanied by a complete sound track orchestration, arranged by James Bradford, for the period and the locales. Wilma Banky, celebrated glamour queen of another celluloid era, plays opposite Rudy in his role of the son, and Agnes Ayers another star of not so long ago, is seen as the wife of the sheik.

In this era of swing musicals, screen "Cinderella" stories, and a tendency toward dark realism in the more serious dramas, there have been innumerable calls from various sections of the country for the return of pure and unadulterated

AT THE McCARTHY

"Forty Naughty Girls"

Paced from start to finish with a deft alternation of hearty laughs and spine-chilling thrills S.R.O. Hall's fresh screen play "Forty Naughty Girls" proved to be a notable addition to the lists of detective mystery films with its opening today at the McCarthy Theatre.

James Ellison and Zasu Pitts head the cast of the picture, the stories of Inspector Oxford hearty and his feminine aide, Hildegarde Kennedy. Miss Pitts is the screen's little professionals, the new offering has given her two principals into frequent conflict over the identity of suspects and motives that develop in the story. Both are bewilderment and surprises the picture easily ranks as the best of the series to date.

The mystery in this thriller pictures begins when the press agent of a big Broadway revue is found murdered in one of the girl's dressing rooms during a performance. Oscar and Hildegarde are in the audience, and quickly set about to unravel the puzzle, only to encounter an embarrassing number of clues—particularly as nearly every member of the company appears to have had good reason to end the press agent's career.

The recently developed "airtight test" which reveals whether or not any one person has fired a gun within 24 hours, soon eliminates many of the possible killers, but this makes things more complicated. And the complications pile up ettes are presented, the Three Stooges in a great comedy entitled "Cash and Carry" that will bring the tears to your eyes from laughing at their funny antics throughout this twenty minute riot. A smart, all technicolor musical revue, presenting excellent stage entertainers in routines of dancing, singing and other clever accomplishments, an exciting adventure presentation entitled "Trailing Along" and an interesting insight into the training life of young recruits becoming future Lassiters and instructors, at a Royal College, will be presented, for everyone's perfect enjoyment, of a swell show.

Robert 'Bob' Greer Memorial Plaque Unveiled at Picton During Impressive Ceremony

Many Church And Sports Notables Pay Respect to Late Athlete

WALTER KNOX THERE

Toronto Baseball Team And Former Team Mates Play in Memorial Game

Prince Edward County in general and the village of Wellington in particular paid tribute to one of their native sons yesterday when a bronze memorial plaque was unveiled on the Memorial Gates of the Agricultural Park to the memory of Robert (Bob) Greer, noted athlete who was killed in an automobile accident with the late Pat Downing, Toronto baseball coach, while returning from the spring training baseball camps in Florida, a few months ago.

While his former team-mates of the Picton and Bright's Athletic Club, Toronto, baseball club assembled with bowed heads, and a large gathering, that consisted of former athletes and friends of the deceased youth looked on, Walter Knox, Toronto, famous athletic coach, pulled a string that formally unveiled the bronze plaque placed on the Memorial Gates by many friends of the young athlete.

"I formally unveil this plaque to the memory of a boy whose name and memory will be kept green for generations to come," said Mr. Knox, as he conducted the ceremony.

Many Notables

On the temporary platform erected in front of the grand stand for the occasion were Mayor Meckitt McKibbon of Picton, Reeve James Hustler and members of the Council of Wellington, the Rev. David Wren, Picton United Church who gave a brief address, the Rev. L. H. Hills, pastor of Wellington United Church, of which the deceased youth was a member, Mr. Knox and Dr. Gerald Allison of Picton.

"We are unveiling this plaque to the memory of one of Prince Edward County's gallant sons," Mr. said in the course of his address, "and in doing so, we cannot forget the life of a splendid Christian gentleman whose life was an open book. He stood for those many worthwhile ideas and endeavored also to his many friends within this county but in the many places in which the path of life took him. He was known and beloved by all who knew him for he was a boy of many virtues, that mark splendid Canadian manhood."

Mr. Hillis offered a dedicatory prayer following which the Massey Hall Veterans' Regiment Band played the Doxology followed by the National Anthem.

The gravel was lined with friends and relatives of the former athlete who paid silent tribute to a youth they all knew and loved so well.

Following the simple but impressive unveiling ceremonies the Agricultural Park gates were opened to admit the large attendance.

Rain however, fallig shortly after the conclusion of the unveiling, spoiled an otherwise outstanding baseball program in which the Bright's Athletic Club, team, recently crowned champions of the West Toronto Baseball Association were scheduled to play a doubleheader with local and district teams.

Rain Interferes

Only four innings were played before officials were forced to call the game on account of heavy rain. However during the brief display the Toronto team gave ample evidence of its championship calibre. A hard-hitting, smart-fielding aggregation, they pounded the offerings of two Bellevill, junior pitchers, Kelleher and Weeks for seven runs with Roy Downing, son of the late famous coach, and battery-mate of the late Bob Greer, save an effective display in relief.

Rain, however called a halt to proceedings, and the teams left the field to dress for a dinner presented to them in the Royal Hotel by Picton officials. Members and officials of the visiting team were guests at the luncheon of Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay Greer, Wellington, parents of the late Bob Greer, and afterwards were taken for an extended cruise down the Bay of Quinte by officials of the Picton Baseball Club. They were accompanied by Trainer Roy Howard, Mr. W. R. Pinkie, Vice-President of the West Toronto Baseball Association, and Mr. Frank Cater, member of the team executive. Members of the team who attended the unveiling included, Roy Downing, manager and Messrs. Rozmiere, Wilkinson, Bright, Caley, Farrell, Dus, Lukasik, McGarry and Yarnell.

COURT UPSETTER

Elwood Cooke may soon be a name to conjure with in the tennis news. In the invitation singles of the Seabright tournament, one of the big annual United States events, Elwood (ADVOY) served to Bobby Riggs in the final, but to reach the final he had eliminated both Frankie Parker and Wilmer Allison. He's all right.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug 10.—Ajit—It was a fine fight from the city it was signed . . . Nobody warmed up to it . . . It never was an outdoor show, anyway and now they've got it where it belongs—in the garden.

From the start tick-it sales have lagged which discouraged the fighters, as well as their pilots and Promoter Mike Jacobs. Not on the twenty per gave Ambers a chance against Armstrong and that hurt. . . . Another thing, interest in Schmeling and Louis reached such a high peak that when the reaction set in it really set in. . . . The sports world still is taking about that fight.

Can't keep football news from sneaking into the sports pages. . . . Here's George Halas, owner of Chicago Bears, predicting the 1938 season will be one of the most outstanding in history. . . . As Ann Arbor they're getting ready for a crowd of 75,000 for the Michigan-Michigan State game largely because of the excitement stirred by the arrival of Fritz Crisler at Michigan. . . . Arnold Herber, Green Bay packer passing star, has collected 4,758 yards (almost three miles) on his passes since 1932. . . .

Bill Terry will stand pat on the present giant lineup for the rest of the season . . . Pat Bribling just couldn't stay out of boxing, so has taken over Harry (Moon) Mullins, recent golden gloves winner . . . Mike Jacobs has completed arrangements to renew his garden lease but is not ready to announce it until today or tomorrow.

Joe McCarthy thinks the Indians will blow up and that Boston and Chicago will furnish the Yanks headaches from start to fin.

Between the Lines

Bright and early tomorrow morning Robert "Boo" Wilson, 1938 Canadian "Soap Box Derby" champion, will leave for Akron, Ohio, accompanied by a number of Belleville Kinsmen. Since winning the All-Canadian "Soap Box Derby", Bob's racing car has received a fresh coat of paint, as a matter of fact when it will be loaded on a trailer tomorrow one would have some difficulty recognizing it. During the race last week the car was painted white, now it has taken on an ebony-black hue with suitable trimmings and numerals.

On the background, around the rear end of the machine, are painted three green-colored maple leaves, Canada's national emblem. Crossed on the front hood are the Canadian and United States flags, also painted. The words "Ontario Intelligencer, Belleville, Ontario, CANADA" are on both sides, with the word Canada in large block letters. Yes, Bob Wilson's car will be as nearly a boosting machine as will roll down "International Hill" at Akron on Sunday, regardless as to where he finishes, although we are all pulling for a Canadian victory. Incidentally the car was painted and decorated by Henry George Halas, of this city, who did a very creditable job to say the least.

Paying tribute to a Christian gentleman, a true sportsman and athlete, hundreds of admirers of the late Bob Greer, who took part in an impressive memorial program, dedicated to his memory, at Picton yesterday, that included the unveiling of a bronze plaque to perpetuate his memory. Sportsmen from all parts of Ontario were present to pay their tribute of remembrances to one who was so highly esteemed and respected by all who knew him. It was a fitting ceremony for one of the calibre of the late Bob Greer, whose memory will long last as a true Christian, and as an athlete and sportsman.

Unfortunately rain interfered with the proposed baseball games to be played in connection with the Bob Greer Memorial program but the sun shone brightly as Walter Knox, one of Canada's veteran sportsmen, unveiled the bronze plaque to the late Bob Greer's memory and the dinner held for the visiting Toronto Bright's team, was a success. It was during the banquet that so many of the Greer's friends outwardly expressed their respect and esteem for one whose passing was keenly felt by all.

Weather permitting the city league softball finals swing into action this evening by pairing Belleville Nurses' Home No. 1 against Belleville Collegiate Institute in five series. Secretary Harry Knott called us this morning to officially give us the playing dates for the finals. The teams will play this evening, or tomorrow evening if it rains, the second game scheduled for next Tuesday, then Tuesday and Wednesday if necessary. If a fifth game is then necessary, owing to each having won two games, the final game will be played on August 19th. Incidentally the Corbys A.C. must be ready to meet the Kingston winners here on the 22nd. of the month.

Amid wind and rain Maurice Callaghan piloted his After You Jack home an easy winner in yesterday's weekly Belleville Yacht Club yacht races. The rain forced all of the boats to harbour, except the After You and Duke Smith's Joka, skipped by the veteran "Cap" Smith. The After You turned the course in less than two hours, finishing 5 minutes and 45 seconds ahead of the Joka. Incidentally President Callaghan is planning to hold the annual Mikel Centennial Cup race in the near future, perhaps on Sunday, Aug. 28th. Fortunately there was a good wind along with yesterday's rain, which accounted for the good time, despite the inclement weather.

Yesterday's rain materially affected the Napanee harness race meet, keeping the attendance down to the minimum. One of the features of the meet was the announcement that Louie Bennet, Ontario's veteran horseman, would celebrate his 80th birthday in the sulky. Louie drove his Axworthy Gratton horse to three first in the 2.17 class, turning one mile in 2.12. With the present age being diminished by the so-called younger age, time apparently seems nothing, in the young life of the 80 years young Louie Bennett, who received many congratulations yesterday at Napanee.

We hear Jack Penny has sold his crack little mare, Catherine Creation. The story is that the mare was sold to a man named Connor, who resides at Wilson's Landing, north of Kingston. Calloway Gratton has won many fine races since being brought out by the Ory Bros. Incidentally Doc Herrington's Victor Widow Gratton won the 2.25 class at Napanee and from all appearances we expect to see some real fine harness races in connection with the Belleville Fair this year, as the horses have had a good season for training.

Just when local fight fans were satisfied to sit back and enjoy the comforts of home and time in the what was advertised as the greatest fight of the year, the Armstrong-Ambers go for the lightweight title of the business, old Jupiter Pluvius stepped both Ambers and Armstrong. Maybe Promoter Mike Jacobs was satisfied about the whole thing, as the pre-sale of tickets had indicated no interest. So-much-so that the scene of the fight has been changed to the Madison Square Gardens and will be held next Wednesday night. During the intervening time the publicity boys will have to work overtime in order to fill the old sports palace, Madison Square Gardens. Incidentally Armstrong wanted an indoors bout in the first place, but Ambers' manager had visions of thousands of potential customers and demanded the Polo Grounds. Less than 20,000 would have been the outdoor crowd last night, experts say.

Begins to look as though the Yankee mound staff has settled away following a rather shaky mid-season performance. Couple average hitting with the return of the McCarthymen hurling and you have a tough obstacle in Boston. In the meantime it looks like a real dog fight in the National League, with the Pirates leading the parade.

HODGE PODGE: Hear ye, hear ye—the puck season—September 1st is the closing date for hockey transfers, under the C.A.H.A., but not within the realm of any one provincial body, such as the O.H.A. . . .So if you are thinking of bringing in hockey players from other provinces, jurisdiction of the O.H.A. get 'em p.d.q.... We also hear there are several new hockey fees up round the B.C.A.F. camp, two of whom are quite well known locally. . . .Congratulations to former Wing Commander A. E. Godfrey, who was promoted to the rank of Group Captain in the R.C.A.F. yesterday....Group Captain Godfrey is keenly interested in the sporting activities at the Airport, especially the hockey set-up.... Flash—it was a baseball player at the St. Lucie hotel last night, "Speedy" is quite proud of his son and heir; congrats.

TITLE BOUT TO BE HELD NEXT WEDNESDAY

Scene to be Switched to Madison Square Gardens

PLEASES ARMSTRONG

Less Than 5,000 at Polo Grounds When Rain Came Down

New York, Aug. 11 (AP)—Henry Armstrong has been stopped—but it took a good, soaking rain to do it.

He and Lou Ambers were all ready to climb into the ring for their lightweight title scrap last night at the Polo Grounds when a drizzle turned into a downpour and referee Mike Jacobs declared a week's armistice.

Taking no chances on another rebuff from the weather, Mike transferred the bout indoors to Madison Square Garden, where the pair will meet next Wednesday night. This was the fight's second postponement, it having been set up for the original date of June 26 when Ambers returned from the West Coast with an injury.

The transfer to the garden pleased Armstrong. Both the little negro and his portly manager, Eddie Mead, wanted to fight Ambers there all along, but the lightweight champion insisted upon an outdoor setting, figuring it would require at least a ball park to hold the crowd.

He doesn't need to worry about that now. Last night's crowd weren't more than 5,000 customers rattling around in the Giants' parlor when the rain came last night, and there were none to speak of on the outside trying to get in.

Belleville Golfers Win Over Port Hope

With rain marring the play after nine holes had been completed, the exhibition golf match between the Port Hope and Belleville Golf Clubs was abruptly halted at the full nine holes played at the Belleville Golf Club course yesterday afternoon.

When the inclement weather terminated the play the Port Hope club was leading, at the completion of nine holes by a score of 10½ to 9½. The Belleville Golf club journey to Trenton for a friendly return match next week.

During yesterday's play, Tommy Carruthers, local golfer, won the low gross tournament played in conjunction with the Port Hope-Belleville exhibition match.

The results for the nine holes played were as follows:

Pirates and Giants are Given A Thorough Going Over While Happy Hartnetts Gain Ground

Warneke Hurls Four Hit Ball as Cards Blank Pirates

RED'S ACE BEATEN

No Change in American League Picture as Top Teams Both Score Wins

(By Sid Feder, Associated Press Sports Writer)

You can never tell in this baseball business. The fellow who draws his pay-check every two weeks from the club treasurer will tell you it's champagne one day, water the next; a limousine today and a hitch-rike tomorrow.

They there just isn't an awful lot of difference between a pat on the back and a pop bottle out of the stands.

Take a look at a couple of this year's examples—long Lonnie Warneke, one of the few reasons the St. Louis Cardinals are still in the National League, and Johnny Vander Meer, the double-no-hit-kid, whose tossing tricks earlier in the year boosted Cincinnati Reds into the money.

For weeks, Long Lon was getting exactly nowhere. But the six-footer from Arkansas has returned to form, gone the route in five of his last six starts, allowed just eight runs in 52 innings and won four out of five, three of them by shutouts.

Lonnie's latest was a four-hit 5-0 whitewashing over the league-leading Pittsburgh Pirates yesterday in a game cut to seven innings by rain.

Vander Meer Loses

Vander Meer, now, has been running just the reverse. Young Johnny tossed two no-hitters in a row, if you remember, and was likewise labelled the hottest thing to come down the pike in years.

But Johnny has failed to go the route in his last five starts, boasts just one victory in seven trips to the post since mid-July, and has been tagged for 38 runs in about 45 innings, which goes to show you how fast things can change. Yesterday he went against the Chicago Cubs, but his boom-boom ball was belted for four runs in the eighth frame, and the happy Harnetts took a 6-3 decision.

By the win, the Cubs climbed to within half-a-game of New York Giants, who were given a neat and thorough going over by Boston Bees, 5-2, and remained six games off the Pittsburgh pace. The scheduled Philadelphia-Brooklyn night game was rained out.

The Yankees kept their five-game edge in the American League by nipping the Senators, 12-11, in the 10-inning affair. A walk with the basely loaded forced in the winning run. Cleveland's second-place Indians has to stage a five-run rally in the ninth to top St. Louis Browns, 9-8.

Swingin' Sammy Chapman celebrated his return to the Athletics' lineup with a two-run homer that beat Boston Red Sox 5-3. Chicago White Sox clubbed four pitchers for 18 hits to nose out the Tigers 15-7.

AMELIASBURG WINS FIRST PLAY-OFF 9-5

Rednersville, Aug. 11th, (Special) In the first game of the play-offs in the Consecon and District Softball League, Ameliasburg won over the Wellington squad 9-5 in one of the best games of the year. The Wellington were ahead in the fourth 5-2 but the Ameliasburg team proved the better team on the night's play by coming from behind to win the game in the sixth.

Ferguson, for the Bobbin's Mills crew, seemed to be the wonder hitter of the night getting four safe hits for four trips to the plate. Jones, Wannamaker, Thompson and Talcott got two hits each for four trips to the batter's box, every other man on the Ameliasburgh team collecting a hit with the exception of Farley who scored once getting on base by virtue of a free pass.

Ameliasburg collected fourteen hits, seven of them in the sixth, had three free passes given to them and reached the initial sack twice on errors by the Wellington crew. In the last inning the boys from Bobbin's Mills played a mighty fine brand of ball to keep the Wellington batters off the score sheet, then making two exceptionally good catches in centre field.

Wellington got eight hits off the pitching of Talcott, who struck out two and no free passes. The latter team made three errors behind him, all in the first inning, when the Wellington crew pushed across three runs. After the first, however, they settled down and played errorless ball to win the game.

The Wellington crew again play the Ameliasburg nine at Ameliasburg on Thursday night and should a third game be necessary, it will be played in Consecon.

The line-ups:

Ameliasburg— D. Jones, 2b.; H. Farley, 1b.; P. Dixon, c.f.; H. Wannemaker, 3b.; C. Thompson, s.s.; J. Black, s.s.; T. Ferguson l.f.; G. Thompson, r.f.; W. Talcott, p.

Wellington—Saunders r.f.; Brimley, 1b.; Vandewater, c.f.; Moore, 2b.; Simmons, c.; Burley, s.s.; Harris, 2b.; Prinz, l.f.; Holding 3b.

SHANNONVILLE WINS EXHIBITION GAME

Shannonville, August 11th (Special)—Behind the two hit pitching of Carman Spencer the Shannonville Hawks eked out a four to three win over the Deseronto all-stars on the latter's diamond on Monday night. Deseronto's three runs were unearned as one was scored on an error and the other two were scored through walks issued by Spencer whose control was very good throughout the tussle. Grant Kimmet, on the mound for Deseronto, yielded six hits and was given good support throughout the game. Roy Doherty scored once for Deseronto and Jackson scored twice. Shannonville scored their first two runs in the third inning when Carman Spencer, lead-off man, singled to Centre, was sacrificed to second by Bazett and Bazett was hit by pitched ball. Stanley Hill then doubled, scoring Spencer and Bazett, meanwhile advancing to third and eventually scoring on a single by Blake Cook. Shannonville scored again in the fourth when Carman Spencer singled, advanced to second when Roy Doherty missed one of Wannamaker's plants and scored when Connell Barnhart doubled. In the fifth, Eugene Maracle, lead-off man, struck out. Donald Dale singled through advanced to second on a single by Houston and the bases were loaded when Gerald Rapp walked, Carman Spencer hit to short, who threw to catcher forcing Donald Dies, and Houston scored the winning run on a single by Connell Barnhart.

Line-ups:

Shannonville — S. Hill, 3b.; B. Cook, 2b.; E. Maracle, rf.; D. Dies, 2b.; W. Houston, c.; G. Sager, 1b.; C. Spencer, p.; C. Barnhart, cf.; R. Sager, lf.

LITTLE GIANTS COMBINE HITTING AND PITCHING

It doesn't happen often but every once in a while the Jersey City Giants combine their customary good pitching with good hitting and they look like one of the International League's top clubs.

It happened yesterday and the Giants' 11-1 triumph over Rochester Red Wings was the standout game of an abbreviated schedule. Buffalo and Baltimore divided a doubleheader, the Herd winning 8-3 and losing 9-7. Montreal split doubleheader, the Herd winning 8-2 Toronto's night game with Newark were rained out.

The Giants piled up 13 hits behind the hard-working Glen Gabler, giving him a lead he doesn't often enjoy. Everyone but Babe Herman and Tom Winsett, who naturally enough are former Brooklyn outfielders, got at least one hit, and Mickey Haslin clouted a homer and a single. Catcher Tommy Padden accounted for a triple and a single and drove home three runs.

VERY FEW PERMITS FOR BREWING ASKED

The home brewing industry which at one time assumed considerable proportions in municipalities throughout the province, has apparently been ruined through the competition afforded by the more open sale of beer, H is indicated by a check of permits issued by the Province of Ontario during the past.

In periods where, before the advent of beverage rooms were legalized, issue of hundreds of permits was made by the office, at present only a bare few are given out. "The number probably wouldn't exceed fifteen or twenty permits a year now," it was stated by Lt.-Col. E. A. Geen in charge of the local office.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford

By Bell Irving

One of the most heartening factors about the present market is that the public is still not heavily involved. It is pointed out that the absence of a sharp break are not great in view of the fact that public participation is at a minimum. Consequently many quarters on the Street are advising the purchase of stocks, confident in the belief that we are headed for higher prices, at sooner or later general public interest step in and put the market away from the professional element.

Another heartening factor about the market is that very little stock is offered for sale on reactions and that trading practically dries up when a downward trend develops. This also attests to the lack of public participation, as presently holders of securities are not frightened into selling by every minor setback.

Better things marketwise are being predicted for the shares of Canadian Car and Foundry common and Preferred. That the company will report satisfactory results for the year to end September 30 next, is generally accepted by what is more important the outlook for good earnings over the next few years is also more than ordinarily promising. The railways should come into the market for new equipment, in order to cope with the anticipated good crop, and in time, such companies as Canadian Car will receive orders for orders for airplanes from the British government.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 11—(AP)—Light selling turned the stock market current downward today, with leaders off fractions to two points and a few volatile issues in excess as much as five. A rallying attempt at the start soon bogged down and volume picked up a bit as offerings appeared. Feeble support came in now and then and extreme losses were reduced. Sometimes stopped once more near the final hour to rebound the previous level of the session.

Transfers were about 900,000 shares.

Livestock

The total as of July cheese was down 2.5 million pounds and for the year to date 7.8 million pounds, but indications were still 3.8 million pounds above the year ago figure. Stocks of cold storage eggs on hand, however, dropped by 2.1 million cases.

DRIVER EXPLAINS WOMAN IS ILL

Provincial Police Investigate Report From Plainfield

Alarmed residents of Plainfield today became suspicious regarding the actions of one of their neighbors and notified Provincial Police. The latter, under Inspector Gardner, proceeded to the scene.

Residents of Plainfield told police that their investigation that they saw a woman fall to the ground and then the driver picked her up and put her in the car. Then the man drove away, the police were informed.

Two miles east of Plainfield, Provincial Police came upon an automobile answering the description of the vehicle in question. Only one man was in the car. When questioned he said his name was "Jones", address, Ottawa. Later he stated his wife had been with him, but had taken a spell, which, he said she was subject, and had run away at Plainfield.

Inspector Frank Gardner, Sergeant Harry Thompson and Constable A. A. Slade searched the car and surrounding district for over two hours this morning, but found no trace of the missing woman. "It is not unusual for a woman to do this," he said, as she is suffering from a malady," assured the man.

Early this afternoon Fred Grey, Latta, saw a woman in the woods behind his property and upon investigation discovered the woman was picking grass eating wild berries. Although the woman is reported to have been acting strangely, Mr. Grey invited her to the company him to his home from which place he notified the police. Sergeant Thompson and Constable Carruthers left immediately to question the woman relative to reports of her actions.

The car automobile was later reported still about the district of Latta, police declared and further ities will be questioned Sergeant Thompson stated before leaving for the scene.

YOUNG FAMILY LOSES STOVE

Acting Fire Chief Asks Co-operation of Citizens to Secure Stove

"The life of a fireman is a strange one at times," Fire Chief Gerald Vance commented today. "Only a few nights ago I got out, as is called upon to do jobs of sometimes a very novel nature. Yesterday in which a young man with a wife and family, lost his job last week, and being unable to keep up his instalments on parts of his furniture were forced to stand by and see two mattresses taken from his beds and the stove from his kitchen."

"At present the little family are endeavouring to cook their meals on a pile of stones in the back yard. We are appealing to citizens of this town which the tea-kettle and other cooking utensils are placed.

"We investigate every case," Vance said, "and found it to be deserving of assistance. I am sure that a hard working young fellow and will do anything, anywhere, to keep the work has kept his little family supplied with food.

"But this last straw has nearly broken down his character and pride. I wonder if any good-hearted citizen has an old stove which could be given to this family. They are sorely in need of it and would greatly appreciate anything in this nature. When it rains they are forced ot go without hot meals for they have no indoor method of cooking them. Surely someone has an old stove for which they have no further use.

"Anything one, who is desirous of helping out the little family, can call the Fire Department, and we will send men and a truck to get it," the Acting Chief concluded.

A. MOWAT TAKES 1,000 MILE TRIP ON GREAT LAKES

Former Belleville Librarian Uses Writing as Home Port

Though the majority of summer vacationists prefer their holidays in trailers or automobiles, Angus Mowat, former librarian of this city, now of Toronto, has this summer been taking his on the water, with the harbor of Whitby as home port.

Anchored in the bay, the ketch-rigged, double-ender "Scotch Bonnet" has been the week-end retreat of Mr. Mowat and family since May, cruising on week-ends and tieing up during the week. Mrs. Mowat and son, Paisley, finish the craft a summer home that tops anything they have tried yet.

Built by Hitchcr of Montreal in 1933, the stout ship was purchased by Mr. Mowat this spring. From Montreal to Toronto as "Andre II", she is of 34-foot length, 10-foot beam, and draws four feet of water, she is listed as a two-masted 12-tonner.

Boils Down Nicely

Now in the Lower St. Lawrence and Lake St. John, "Scotch Bonnet" is to be decked planked on oak rib and frames.

Her heavy duty, four-cylinder, 60-horsepower auxiliary engine logs her about six knots.

She has plenty accommodation for five persons, and has four permanent berths. She is rigged for single handing and carries about 700 feet of canvas.

A self-confessed wool sailor, Mr. Mowat served his apprenticeship on the Bay of Quinte. This season his holidays he took a 1,000 mile trip on the Great Lakes and River St. Lawrence. The trip was from Niagara Bar to the Main Ducks, a distance of 120 miles in Georgian Bay.

Mr. Mowat is inspector for public libraries for Ontario.

DECORATION DAY PLANS COMPLETE

All that remains to make annual decoration day being arranged by the Belleville Overseas League of Belleville for Sunday, August 14; the same committee which worked with co-operation of the general citizen public, it was stated by officials in charge today.

An appeal is made by the veterans for contributions of flowers in order to decorate the graves of those who died on service of their country during the days of the Great War. Scores of graves, last resting paces of those who have been buried and will not be forgotten in Belleville Cemetery and it is hoped that they will be freshened in color and memory through the efforts of the veterans and the citizens generally.

This year the united bands of the Belleville Collegiate Corps and also the Belleville Salvation Army Corps will be available for the services held at the cemetery. Parade will be conducted under the auspices of the Belleville Ministerial Association. Previous to the assembly of citizens and veterans in the cemetery, a parade service will be held by the bands.

Citizens who may wish to donate flowers for the occasion may have their donations collected by calling at the Overseas League hall or at the Memorial Hall, Front street. The telephone number is 1,000. Flower donations may be left at the local Armouries on the day, and a truck and a member of the local veterans will be on the market where at his disposal will be any donations to be taken.

Veterans, as in former years, will fall in at the armouries in the afternoon at a time to be announced by the Belleville Ministerial Association which will appear in Friday's issue of this paper. They will then, accompanied on foot to the Albert College driveway by the Belleville Municipal Band, from where veterans will be taken to the cemetery in cars donated for the occasion.

TEACHERS DISCUSS FACILITIES, SALARIES

Winnipeg, Aug. 11.—(CP)—Problems of salary and of working facilities were discussed today by the Canadian Teachers' Federation in annual convention here.

Of particular interest to delegates was the outline of means of settlement of disputes between Ontario teachers and school boards, given yesterday by Dr. Fred Henry of Toronto. Mr. Henry told of establishment of a board of reference, supervised by a judge appointed by the Minister of Education. No board is allowed to fix a disputed teaching position until 10 days after the board has made its report.

GEORGE W. SULMAN

George W. Sulman, brother of ex-Mayor Charles Sulman, both of Belleville, passed away at his late residence in Toronto on Wednesday evening, August 10th, in his 73rd. year. Death followed an illness of a few weeks' duration; he had, however, been in failing health for some time.

Some fifty years ago the late Mr. Sulman resided in Belleville for a time, being associated in business with his brother, Mr. Charles Sulman, as a boot and shoe dealer in the business and eventually located in Chatham where he was a

First Comes Pride

By ADELAIDE R. KEMP

The kitchen, with its unwashed breakfast dishes, presented a dreary prospect Monica, by dint of cosaxing with bits of paper and chips, brought the dying fire to life. Accustomed as she had become during the past year to this mode of housekeeping it did not take her long to get supper for her father and herself. He was unusually silent. During the quiet meal, memories flocked modily through Monica's mind. Recollections of that ghastly period of time when she and her mother had counted the awful days while her father waited behind prison bars for them to pass came to the front. She had bravely struggled through shame and sickness teaching the little school, but his had proved too hard for her mother.

Suddenly her father spoke—"I've sold out, Monica."

Walking around to his daughter's chair, he laid his hand on the bent head with a sudden pitying touch. "I'm sorry, child, old moon-shine—honest, poor little Acushla. Things are going to be different. I'm going to Canada to work. You can get another school where you are not known."

So at the end of the term, Monica left Silver Ridge for a new town far up on the Maine coast. The months passed, and there was no word from her father. Still her heart held a song, for she and the young doctor of the place had become great friends.

Riding along in the breezy sunlight one late October afternoon, John said, quite unexpectedly, "Tell me about your home, Monica."

Monica was startled into the remembrance of the old tumbledown farmhouse. "My home?" she stammered, "Why, it wasn't — I was poor."

"I didn't mean that." There was a note of tender pity in the strong voice. "You never talk about yourself. How long have you been alone?"

"Not very long." Monica looked out over the sea, shimmering through tears. "Mother died last year, and dad, dad left me in April."

Suddenly John gathered Monica in his arms. "Dear little orphan," he whispered, "I love you."

Held close in his arms Monica could not tell this wonderful lover of the old disgrace.

With the coming of the winter months, John was unusually busy, and could not be with her so much. One especially stormy night with the rest of the household retired early, Monica sat in the old armchair before the open fire thinking about him and their happy wedding plans for June. Outside the wind whimpered through the snow already drifting against the window panes. Suddenly she sprang to her feet. What she heard was not the moaning of the wind. With hands outstretched, Monica staggered to the door and opened it.

"Acushla!

"Dad!"

With trembling hands she helped her father across the threshold. Tenderly leading him to the couch, she unfastened the buttons of his worn overcoat. Wiping the snow from his face, she arranged the cushions under his head and bent closer to hear what he was saying.

"Don't be frightened, Mona. I'll be all right soon."

When she brought him a steaming cup of milk and a blanket her father made a feeble attempt to raise himself on his elbow.

"Dear daddy drink this. I've just called a doctor, a friend of mine."

"No, no, Monica!" His voice was filled with appreciation. "I'm going away in the morning."

Monica held the cup to his trembling lips. "Drink this, dear. We'll talk later."

He looked at his daughter almost wildly. "I'm not disgrace you again, poor little Acushla." He lay down and closed his eyes.

At John's touch upon his arm, Monica's father woke. He would not talk, however. Monica had told John nothing over the telephone save that she needed him for someone who had just come through the storm. When the patient was drowsing again, John turned to the trembling girl by his side.

"Come, sweetheart, you need a hot drink yourself. Come into the kitchen. Your dad can't be back before tomorrow, although he couldn't have traveled much farther. We'll have him carried to the hospital."

Monica suddenly leaned over the quiet figure and smoothed back a lock of gray hair, pressing a tender kiss on the wrinkled brow. She raised her eyes to John's astonished gaze.

"Yes, John," she said. "Shall stay with me. He's my father. I've let you believe wrongly all this time," she continued, "because I was ashamed of him."

Seer Encouraged Brother In Search for Hugh Jones, Said He Would Be Found Alive

Charles Jones of Marmora Writes Gripping Story of Visit to Seer And of His Revelations—Scene Accurately Described Says Charles Jones—Story of Finding of Hugh in Bog by Police and Charles Jones Is Related

When hope had been all but abandoned by the scores of volunteers who took part in the six-day search for Hugh Jones of Marmora, while he clung to a protruding log in the depths of a swamp on Crowe River, imprisoned in the clinging mud for almost a week, his brother, Charles Jones, persevered in the belief that his brother would ultimately be found—safe.

His had been promised this during his search by a seer at Trenton, who was formerly in Belleville, whom he visited when hope seemed at the lowest ebb.

"Your brother is living and will be found," Charles Jones was told by the local clairvoyant, who described minutely the location in which the imprisoned man would be found.

Seeker's Gripping Story

In a gripping self-written story of his visit to the fortune teller, Mr. Charles Jones, the brother of Hugh tells of the events which took place in his personal letter below:

Marmora, Ont., Aug 9, 1938

"The Ontario Intelligencer,
"Belleville, Ont.

"Dear Sirs:—

"Daily papers carried the story of the man who was stuck in a bog in Rawdon Township. I was much interested in this case as this man was my brother. The story was fairly accurate as it appeared in these papers but a Fortune Teller played a very important part in the finding of this man and I am going to explain his part as it might sometime be a help to others. I have called this man a Fortune Teller, though he advertises himself as a Palmist and understands this work, but he has been borne with a gift, being the seventh son of a seventh son of a seventh son, I would call him the Mystery Man.

"I am not going to give you this story in full detail as there is much connected therewith as well as try to give the most important parts, it is as follows:

Accident to Hugh in Youth

"My brother met with an accident when a young man, living on a farm a team of horses ran away with him, threw him off a wagon, he was knocked unconscious and received a severe head injury and gradually afterwards became deranged, he had been placed in a hospital for treatment but never became normal. It was a very hard matter to get him to talk and when last we knew that he would not make any answer or responses to any one calling or such like. This made it extremely hard to find him. He got lost on July 26th while trying to get to his niece's, who was stopping in a cottage on Crowe River a couple of miles distant from where he lived. The last one-half mile to this cottage has to be walked as there is no road into it and this is where he lost his way, had come to the river and in following the river shore came to this boggy marshy place, this bog extended back from the river a long distance and as the water in the bog was hidden with rushes, etc., he must have tried to get across and got stuck.

Trachic to Come

"On the night of Aug. 1st, I received word from Allen Mill that a man had been seen in a boat and had acted strangely, sent out to see the party but he had left for Toronto. However he had stated that he had seen a strange man in a boat near an island in the river. The next day we checked for missing boats and the strange man but of no avail. The following day a large gang of men were searching in the woods under Provincial Officer Drymond of Madoc. We came out of the woods at noon hour, tired and hot, sat down and talked. Fortune tellers and everything were discussed by Mr. Drymond and what I though best to do I said I was going to get in contact with this man in Toronto where ever he might be that had seen the strange man in the boat and then I was going to see a Fortune Teller. Mr. Drymond said he would get in contact with this man and then go to see this Fortune Teller. Mr. Drymond got in contact with this man and found that the man he saw appeared as in a boat, was on the bog where my lost brother, that he thought he was a game warden watching him and that in about 20 minutes time he pulled away. This was clear to us as we found my brother. He was in the same place where the Toronto man left him, he was stuck in the mud and in the reeds and grasses about the height of a man in a boat who had pulled in there, thus he was taken for a game warden, later he had sunk in the mire and the reeds and grasses hid him completely.

"I might mention here, that on Aug. 1st myself and other men had been searching the bog and had passed within about 25 feet of my brother, not knowing that he was there and others had been at the same place and had also been right close to him.

Visit to Palmist

"The foregoing has been told as it helps to prove the ability of the Fortune Teller. I left my home here in Belleville to get in contact with this Palmist on Aug. 3rd and found his name was Professor Cybelle and that he had left Belleville and was in Trenton. I went to another Palmist in Belleville who claims to tell but would not be interested in the case of any use to me. I went to Trenton and located Professor Cybelle, gave him no insight in the matter and he almost immediately picked up the case, followed my brother's trail for some distance, mentioned wherein he worked, which he had and he had been seen on this certain road by farmers. The Professor stated he was in the bog at this time and said, there is something wrong, that man or close relatives have been born with a veil or that he is mentally deranged. He asked me to not state anything to him as he would rather get the case himself. Professor Cybelle told him he was correct, that my brother had been born with this condition. He remarked, I knew it for I get him and I lose him, I get him and I lose him, I get him and I lose him and the kind of persons when real bad cannot be found so that they are too slow as he would be hard to get. I was there about two and one-half hours. I was surprised, the story is a long one, he told me many things I cannot give here, the main ones were:

Seer's Story Substantiated

"That there was a river with a long bend and that my brother came to this and walked down the shore. This we now know was correct. That he was living and would be found alive, that he had travelled a couple of days or more but had came to a stop and was still at the place where he had stopped. This was correct. He came to the mire and stayed. That he was not in the woods as we thought, but was in the open, that people at times were right close to him. This was correct. That he was living and would be found and many other things which since can be plainly seen. He laid much stress on the fact that he walked the shore of the river and had we examined this carefully he would have been found sooner. We laid much stress on the fact that he was in the woods but Professor said he was not in the woods and that he would never be found there and that there was no use of looking there, and after he was finished gave me proof of his ability in other ways, My self was along and a relative from Niagara Falls, neither both have ailments and he proved himself a human X-ray with women but he cannot do it with men. His impression was as stated that I had the faith that my brother really walked the shore of that river.

The Finding of My Brother

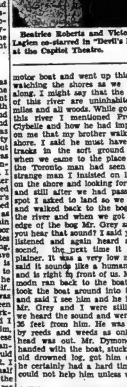
"On the afternoon of Aug. 8th Provincial Officer Drymond, County Constable Grose and myself, as I



Beatrice Roberts and Victor McLaglen co-starred in "Devil's Party" at the Capitol Theatre.

Rudolph Salcetino and Vilma Banky in a scene from "Son of the Sheik" at the Bells Theatre, along with "Blondes at Work."

How To Overcome Piles And Rectal Soreness

If you are annoyed with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not neglect the same or run the risk of an operation. Any itching, soreness or painful passage of stool, is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once. For this purpose get from J. S. McKeown or any druggist, a package of Hemrold and use as directed. This formula, which is used internally, quickly relieves the itching and soreness and aids in healing the sore, tender spots. Hemrold is a physician's prescription and is highly recommended. It is easy to use and it seems the height of folly for anyone to risk an operation when a simple remedy, which is so pleasant to use may be had at such a reasonable cost.

I'm just going to stop worrying and pay a visit to Madam Seero and ask her about it, and I'm sure with her sigh-stick powers she'll locate it, she's wonderful that way, and there's nothing to laugh at, Willyum.

This is just a little harmless choking spell, pop said, and ma said, it's ignorant laughter, if you want the true description of it. It's a scientific fact that lots of people possess slightsick powers, and Madam Seero just happens to be one of them, so there's no super-naturel miracle about that, she said.

Well O, ma, is anybody libel to have slightsick power? I said to ma said, Absolutely anybody, the most unsuspecting people possess it. Well then O winickers, ma, I bet I've got it, I'm going into a trance and see if I can tell where your beaded bag is. I said.

And I grabbed my head with both hands and started to roll it around, saying, I see it, I see it plane, it's rite between the wall and a certain piece of furniture with mirrors in it. I've been in a trance, where am I? I said.

Well of all things, it all comes back to me, ma said, One day the plummers were working in the house and I pushed my beaded bag behind my vanity dresser, that boy actually has slightsick powers and I'm going to report my point to a tea, she said, and pop said, Balloney, he knew it all the time.

Of course he's claim he did, because you always stick together like dins and millusses, so I'm not even going to ask him, ma said. Which she didn't.

Science, Service Meteorologist

August hurricanes! Next to September, hurricanes or tropical cyclones are more frequent in August than any other month. William A. Redfield, an American, collected observations of these storms for ten years and drew up a very fundamental account of them. He defined a cyclone as consisting of a large mass of air with a rapid motion of rotation counter-clockwise, a calm centre, and the whole system with a steady onward motion. He also mentified the region where they occured; between the Tropic of Cancer and the Equator; and their direction of travel; first westward and then recurving to the northeast.

Hitch - Hikes to B. C. on $30 Girl Finds West More Hospitable

Vancouver, Aug. 12.—(CP)—Nineteen-year-old Gwen Evans of Montreal, who hitch-hiked across Canada on $30, is going to make her home in the west "where people are more hospitable."

Three weeks ago Gwen, clerk in a dress shop, left Montreal with $30. Today, with $5 cents left, she had reached her goal.

"I'm going to get a job," she declared. "I'm not going back home. I'm going to stay in Vancouver, so I'll do anything—even housework," she said.

Henke and his flying mates, Rudolph Von Moreau, co-pilot; Paul Dierberg, flight engineer; and Fritz Kober, radio operator, were casual about the flight.

"We expected to make the trip in something like 24 to 26 hours," Henke commented, "and now we've done it."

He described the trip as "smooth" with the exception of the mid-Atlantic headwinds that have been the bane of every flier who attempted the westward crossing.

The Brandenburg made the unheralded flight as a demonstration of Germany's readiness to institute mail and passenger service between Germany and the United States. Henke said, however, that oceanic passenger flights in such ships as the four-motored low-winged Brandenburg probably would be impracticable because of the big fuel load necessary.

The flight was sponsored by the Focke-Wulf Company which manufactured the plane.

Well-informed quarters, said Havas, believed that the resume of these military preparations published today by the Manchester Guardian, "is a rapid solution of the divided minority question.

Other Movements

The Manchester Guardian's diplomatic correspondent reported military train movements along the Nuremberg-Ulm line, provisional mobilization of certain service and the fact that all farmers have been called to the colors to assist in the disposal of Reich military authorities by Aug. 20.

"Whatever there is to be no trace of enthusiasm for any kind of conflict," the correspondent of the German people. "Discontent with the regime is growing steadily and it is being increased by concern over the international situation."

Whatever the object of Berlin's military preparations, they were interpreted differently by three schools of thought.

Three Interpretations

1. Simply as preparations for extensive manoeuvres designed to impress Germany's neighbors.

2. A new sort of warning given openly by the Reich as a psychological weapon to influence the current trend of events.

3. Demonstration of a war machine ready for instant action should the projected "solution" of Czechoslovakia's minority problem fail or be unfeasible within "reasonable" time.

Hope Germans Stay Interested

The statement was made in regard to reports of huge German troops movements published in French and British newspapers.

These sources said the French newspapers and declared the German troop movements in the European press appear exaggerated.

Some newspapers of both London and Paris suggested that Czechoslovakia had been called to the colors in Germany for a period of instruction to supplement the standing army.

Is Aid Diplomacy?

Some belief was expressed in foreign office circles that German military preparations were designed to add diplomatic pressure on the Czechoslovak government as well as on Great Britain and France for a rapid solution of the divided minority question.

Those saying "anything can happen" foreign office and diplomatic circles in the main were inclined to believe the preparations were designed only for pressure and discarded the probability of conflict.

Diplomatic Speculation

London, Aug. 12.—(CP)—The Havas news agency in Paris said that intensive military preparations "reported in all parts of Germany" and "progress in Germany" were the centre of diplomatic speculation.

Well-informed quarters, said Havas, believed that the resume of these military preparations published today by the Manchester Guardian, "is a rapid solution of the divided minority question.

Other Movements

The Manchester Guardian's diplomatic correspondent reported military train movements along the Nuremberg-Ulm line, provisional mobilization of certain service and the fact that all farmers have been called to the colors to assist in the disposal of Reich military authorities by Aug. 20.

"Whatever there is to be no trace of enthusiasm for any kind of conflict," the correspondent of the German people. "Discontent with the regime is growing steadily and it is being increased by concern over the international situation."

Whatever the object of Berlin's military preparations, they were interpreted differently by three schools of thought.

Three Interpretations

1. Simply as preparations for extensive manoeuvres designed to impress Germany's neighbors.

2. A new sort of warning given openly by the Reich as a psychological weapon to influence the current trend of events.

3. Demonstration of a war machine ready for instant action should the projected "solution" of Czechoslovakia's minority problem fail or be unfeasible within "reasonable" time.

Other Crisis in Days

Washington, Aug. 12 (AP)—Dan Roper, United States Secretary of Commerce, today declared a conviction of high-placed Japanese friends that peace will pass through the crisis of war threats in the next 30 days.

The Secretary of Commerce, who returned this week from a month's visit in Great Britain, said in an interview:

"The people with whom I talked said that if they could get through the next month without

COUNTRY GREEN, PASTURES GOOD

No Cause For Complaint by Anyone, Says Seeds Inspector

"I've never seen the country so green so late in August as it is this year. And I've never seen the pastures so good so late in the season," stated Mr. Wm. Michael, Dominion Seeds Inspector of the local office, in commenting upon the benefits recent rains have conferred on the section. # MOTOR TRAFFIC VIOLATION IS CRIMINAL OFFENCE

Parliament Assents High-way Traffic Violations to be Under Code

PENALTIES INCLUDED

Certain violations to motor regulations, previously covered only in the Provincial Highway Traffic Act, have been included in the Canadian Criminal Code, assented July 1st, 1938.

Leaving the scene of an accident, reckless or dangerous driving, prohibitive driving or driving while licences have been suspended by their court, all of these offences are now included in the Canadian Criminal Code as offences punishable under the jurisdiction of that code, of law enforcement.

Under an act of amendment to the Criminal Code, the Dominion Government enacts as follows:—

Subsection two of section 285 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted:

"Whenever, owing to the presence of a motor car on the highway, an accident has occurred to any person, or to any horse or vehicle in charge of any person, any person driving the motor car shall be guilty of an offense and liable, either on indictment or on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars and costs or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months if, with intent to escape liability either civil or criminal, he fails to stop his car, render assistance, and give his name and address. Such failure shall be prima facie evidence of an intent as aforesaid."

The Criminal Code also provides that:

"Every one who drives a motor vehicle on a street, road, highway or other public place recklessly, or in a manner which is dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the nature, condition and use of the street, road, highway or place, and the amount of traffic which at the time is or might reasonably be expected to be upon such street, road, highway or place, shall be guilty of an offence and liable,

(A) upon indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or both such imprisonment and fine, or

(B) on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or both such imprisonment and fine who, whilst disqualified from driving a motor vehicle or an automobile by reason of the legal suspension or cancellation in any province of a permit or licence to drive therein, or by reason of any conviction under the provisions of subsection one of this section, drives any motor vehicle or automobile anywhere in Canada."

—Resulting upon the above amendments to the Canadian Criminal Code, which include highway traffic regulations under that code of law enforcement, Inspector Gardner, of the Provincial Police, today states that the above "college" of young men that are charges are still included in the Provincial Highway Traffic Act, however, and can be preferred under that act of law enforcement for the investigating officer selects. If the charges are preferred under the Criminal Code and convictions registered against offending motorists, however, the above penalties are enforced, Inspector Gardner added.

Theatres

AT THE "McCARTHY"

"Forty Naughty Girls"

Inspector Oscar Piper, the cocky, pipe-chewing police detective, and Hildegarde Withers, his lovely schoolmarm assistant in the screen hit track down another murdered in their usual hilarious fashion in "Forty Naughty Girls," now playing at the McCarthy theatre.

James Gleason again portrays the inspector's role, as in the two preceding pictures of the series, and Zasu Pitts, who played Hildegarde in "The Plot Thickens," once more turns to the task of correcting Gleason's errors.

Unlike the earlier Piper-Withers films, the new R.K.O. Radio offering packs its swift action into the space of a few hours, its thrills and comedy occuring on one eventful evening in a theatre setting. While a performance of a successful revue is going on, the show's press agent is found murdered in the ingenue's dressing room, and Oscar and Hildegarde, in the audience, hasten to solve the mystery.

Before they can apprehend the killer, another murder is committed in full view of the audience, and the search waxes fast and furious, with practically all members of the company and the chorus of dancing beauties apprehended, with the newly-developed "nitrate test" clinching the proof of guilt.

As in former pictures of the series there is a pretty little romantic interest in this case with Marjorie Lord, Broadway beauty, and Eric Stanley, as the two youngsters whose affairs are tangled up in the killing. Joan Woodbury as the star of the revue, Edward Marr as the ill-fated press agent, Frank Mc. Thomas as a property man, Alan Edwards as the show's producer and Aileen Chase as the author-leading man, as well as Tom Kennedy as Gleason's blundering aide, all contribute to the excitement and laughs of "Forty Naughty Girls."

The three sleuths in their latest laugh-crammed comedy entitled "Cash and Carry" an all color musical revue that all will thoroughly enjoy, an excellent adventure story of the outdoors entitled "Trailing Danger" and a public topic of interest, presenting young recruits at an aviation school, that of lives a highly interesting view of actual training and study, in a large "college" of young men that are air-minded and going through for the purpose of becoming future aviators and instructors, presented in addition is the feature presentation at the McCarthy theatre.

AT THE BELLE

"Little Miss Broadway"

Six new songs stud score of number one star's latest show — "Little Miss Broadway," Shirley Temple's latest starring picture has been completed and is scheduled for its opening at the Belle theatre.

Already, those who have seen the production say that it demonstrates beyond a shadow of a doubt why this young lady is America's number one star.

It' is an acknowledged fact that to millions throughout the world, each new Shirley Temple picture is an event of major magnitude. Most recently India capitulated to the charm of this young thespian when an age-old rule against feminine entertainers dropped its barriers—and La Temple is now the box office champion of the world.

Better Than Ever

Of "Little Miss Broadway" the previewers say that Shirley dances and sings with greater ease than she has in any previous film, and her rare dramatic ability continues to amaze her audiences.

Part of the secret of her phenomenal success is credited to the fact that Darryl F. Zanuck, production chief of Twentieth Century-Fox, consistently has commandeered every facility within his control to assure the best in story, production material and cast. And "Little Miss Broadway" has been reported as a double order of everything.

Grand Trouper Group

The cast which supports Shirley is headed by George Murphy, Hollywood's ace acting-hoofer, Jimmy Durante, a droll comic who needs no introduction; Phyllis Brooks, the "girl rising" young blonde beauty who appears with Shirley in "Rebecca" and Edna May Oliver, who is known by myriads of fans as the austere old maid.

The cast also includes two dozen big names, notable among them George Barbier, Edward Ellis, Jane Darwell, Donald Meek, Patricia Wilder and Claude Gillingwater, Sr.

Sparkling Tunes

Six sparkling tunes by Walter Bullock and Harold Spina—ranging from ballads to sizzling scring, lend themselves to Shirley's singing as well as intricate steps which she and Murphy execute together.

Production has called for ultra-modern sets as well as dowdy old theatrical hotel-room scenes.

Special Short Episode

A special group of surrounding short subjects for your added pleasure include a two reel comedy entitled "Money on Your Life" featuring Charles Kemper and Danny Kaye, a colored cartoon treat "A Star is Hatched" and the latest Belle News Events.

Rudolph Valentino, the world's greatest lover, in "Son of the Sheik," and Glenda Farrell in another Torchy Blane thriller, "Blondes at Work" is now being presented and those who haven't seen these two hits would be well advised to come down.

FRED S. DEACON VISITS SCENE OF FORBEARS' LIVES

Great-Grandfather Was Kingston's First Postmaster

SERVED IN ARMY

Visiting the scenes of the boyhood and later lives of his paternal forbears, Mr. Fred S. Deacon, Sr., of this city, was an interested attendant at the Old Home Week and Centenary Celebration of Kingston recently.

Mr. Deacon is a great-grandson of Thomas Deacon, who was the first postmaster of Kingston. His great-grandfather was in charge in an old stone building on Princess Street, below King Street, as it was here the stage coaches from Montreal and York (now Toronto) brought the mail. Mr. Thomas Deacon remained postmaster until 1813, when he resigned to take over military duties in the commissariat of a British regiment. He was succeeded by the Hon. John MacAuley until 1836 and then Robert Deacon, a son of Thomas Deacon, was appointed and held office for more than forty years.

Served With 24th Regiment

Kingston's first postmaster served with the 24th British regiment of Foot for thirty-six years, and an additional sixteen years at Kingston. Thomas Deacon was buried in St. Paul's Anglican Churchyard, Cataraqui, near Kingston, known in the early days as Grave Street. He was one of the first Anglican worshippers to welcome Governor Simcoe upon his arrival at Kingston, then a village, in 1792. It was during this journey that Lady Simcoe took ill on board the ship Onondaga and was taken to the house built by the Indian chieftain, Tyendinaga, of "Smoke" Reynolds, famous pioneer of Wellington, now occupied by Dr. Ross Hall, and there died in the lakeside village. Lady Simcoe was buried on the mainland in the bay of six weeks and through their knowledge of herbs, and natural medicines which restored her health.

Deacon's father, the late William Deacon, who was born in the block where the Kingston Whig-Standard is now housed, in the Limestone City when he was but a babe of age. Recognizing the potentialities of Belleville, then a flourishing town, he settled here where he became associated with the bakery and confectionery trade.

WARS AND NO WAR

For once in its obsession with fears of international strife, the world has not taken the Russo-Japanese fighting for disputed frontier between Siberia and Manchoukuo seriously, mainly because from the beginning a few weeks ago it was told that their border scrap has been in progress for years.

With the Japanese evident desire for settlement, the world has associated Japanese disappointment with the progress of their undeclared war in China. Nippon, foolish enough to gorge herself on the great "empire" of China, whom she said she was going to chastise for being an unsatisfactory neighbor, finds the gorging process rather sickening. The Chinese do not show the impairment that was expected and Japan has her hands full. So the war goes on in China, while there is a truce or armistice on the Siberian frontier.

General Franco has a tough job on his hands. He seems to have forgotten that the Spaniards on the other side are ust as stubborn and as bitter as his men and that they will fight to the end, particularly because the insurgents are Spaniards. Whatever one thinks of the Spanish war, its bitterness, its savagery and its tragic losses in life and wealth, the heroism of the people on whatever side must be marvelled at.

After two months, the outside nations still remain out of the war in Spain at least nominally, though there are claims that foreign troops have been sent even recently into the country to try to rush a victory for the insurgents. But Franco must carry on the fight. He started it and must keep the fighting going.

As leaders of some nations look over the European and Asiatic scene they must sometimes have a doubt if strength will mean strength in the end. They see Franco compelled to fight on and on, they see Japan struggling to crush the flexible Chinese Empire, they see the growing strength of democratic countries like Britain and France and the bitterness of nations even in the New World to the dangers of autocracy, they find themselves not liked in the concert of nations, they take a look at Russia and it frightens them, so perhaps they wonder or will soon wonder, if they ever had a chance to dominate the world with their own wills through militarism.

Militarism has been a powerful arm for impressing the people of their own countries and even for urging the democracies to rearm, but probably the leaders of democratic nations see that they never could have adequate strength to impose their will on the world. To the democratic states the folly of one nation arming with the notion that the other nations will not arm to protect its interests. Even if the free nations of the world ever believed that the great democracies would yield to the show and words of might.

Meanwhile the nations pursue new alignments and alliances, which play no small part in cornering on ambitious nation.

DEVELOPMENT OF CIVIL AVIATION

Civil aviation has reached no mean accomplishment in this year. A few days ago it was the memorable flight of the Mercury which caught the world's attention. Now a German plane the Brandenburg has crossed the Atlantic to demonstrate in a practical way that German commercial aviation companies are ready to compete for the cross-ocean trade. Britain is already in the field and so is the United States.

Flights in less or little more than a day to cross the ocean are the proven thing this year. Last year, even early this year, such commercial progress seemed almost too great to be true, but it has come.

MAN'S HUMANITY TO MAN

One of the blessings of modern invention was witnessed this week with Father Paul Schulte, a German army aviator in the Great War, who this week flew through the icy Arctic and brought out a stricken missionary whom he had carried to his plane and then sped to Chesterfield. The long range of the flight of mercy, the most outstanding in many ways, is emphasized by the fact that when the plane had reached Arctic Bay on Baffin Island, N. W. T., Father Schulte and his mechanic, Brother Beaudoin, had flown about 1,200 miles through rain and fog through Arctic chill. They were more than 300 miles within the Arctic Circle, far north of the Arctic mainland.

Father Schulte was at Churchill when he heard of Father Chochard's illness and at once set out on his flight to bring the ill missionary to the only hospital in the barren region at Chesterfield, though Schulte had just completed a 700-mile flight from Repulse Bay. He did not stop but went at once to Churchill by plane expecting to pick up a doctor whom he found ill and unable to accompany him. While the flying priest was making his way through to Father Chochard, Dr. Melling, the sick missionary, was there

ON A VACATION

Wearied by men, and traffic of the town,
Once more I come, as in the years gone by,
Where hills of canyoned green and tawny brown
Slope to a rainless-sky.

Drinking anew the ancient psalm-like peace of brooklets lapping under shadowy boughs,
I feel life's one condemnal, who wins release
Out of the prison house.

Here only, where the groves and streams are lords
And ridge and vale make one harmonious whole,
The tired seeker, worn by pummelling hordes,
Can find his own lost soul.

THAT FIVE-YEAR-OLD SON OF A SETTLER who survived five days and four nights in the bush between Pigeon Falls on the Sturgeon River, did not do more than was expected of hardy child of hardy settler parents. Farming in the Field country is no snap and the French Canadian settlers are about the only nationality who could survive—English speaking settlers have tried the game and lost. The French Canadian in the first place is a bushman and is reasonably sure of a profitable winter in the bush and a spring on the drive, also lucrative, while the women folks can scratch deep house and look after the potato crops and whatever else is planted — thus a winter in the bush and a summer on his own land is made to pay dividends, while of late years there has been considerable cash in the coin member of the legislature holding the bag with the road money, which the settler may never see, but which will reappear, probably, in a credit upon the books of the storekeeper who may happen to be the M.L.A. The boy was hungry, but of course for only the hardy survive fifty below in winter and flies and other torments in summer. Bears there are a-plenty but the bears would not hurt him unless he got too familiar with the cubs, wolves there are, but usually the wolf, unless very hungry, is wary of humans, and keeps his distance from roving objects as a rule. There are plenty berries to eat in Northern Ontario just now and plenty of water in the rivers and lakes and game, all of which helped the boy to survive the harrowing experience. Nipissing has many French Canadian settlers, having been colonized on well laid plans years ago, under the direction of Father Paradis, a picturesque character, who has a chapel and a flock near the village of Verner and one on an island in Lake Temagami, at one time, held a pass on the C.P.R. in connection with his colonizing duties and it is said had a room in the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa. Verner, by the way, a village of between five hundred and a thousand souls, is almost solidly French, the only exception being a few years ago, and probably still being the C. P. R. pumper who kept the water tanks for the locomotives full, and his family. His presence was objected to, according to his own story, because he objected to the French language being the only language taught in the school to which he sent his children, a public school, by the way, drawing public school grants. Verner folks did not want any English competition, apparently, and asked the C. P. R. to make it unanimous by removing the English speaking water pumper and appointing a French-Canadian in his stead — he was done on one occasion — it is alleged when an Englishman was appointed station agent there — apparently by mistake.

Making The Lung Rest Cures Tuberculosis

Years ago when anyone developed consumption — tuberculosis —it was usually just a matter of how long he would live, months or years. By going into the woods and living an outdoor, easy-going life, some consumptives recovered their health and strength and lived for many years.

Today tuberculosis is discovered early because of the X-ray and other tests, and when a consultant in a sanitorium brings about a cure in the majority of cases. In former days rest in bed, sometimes with a bag of shot on the affected side of the chest was the only or usual method of securing the needed rest. A lung that is resting, lying but little used for breathing, gets a chance to heal, whereas active breathing due to exercise or work keeps the lung irritated and the tuberculosis itself prevents the lung from healing and the patient is likely to grow worse.

As this "rests" even if successful, sometimes takes years to cure tuberculosis, new methods of resting the lung by surgical operations have been searched for and finally discovered. These methods put pressure on the lung and prevent it from rising.

There is pneumothorax—filling the chest cavity next to the lung with gas or air—and preventing lung expanding; phrenicoexeresis—cutting the phrenic nerve that moves the lung, and thereby paralyzing the lung; thoracoplasty, which is an operation for removal of parts of, or of whole ribs, thereby the chest wall collapses because it is not supported or kept raised up by the chest wall.

Pneumothorax is the most common method used to collapse the lung, forcing the diseased lung to rest. Lining the chest wall and covering the lung is a membrane called the pleura. By allowing air to flow or blow into the space between the pleura lung and chest wall the air presses on the lung, forcing it to collapse, press much against the hard ribs lined walls of the chest), the diseased lung is forced into a small space and cannot expand itself. Because it cannot expand — no movement in it—Nature gets a chance to heal the lung. Although this air does help, go out of the way of the lungs (lungs covered by the pleura; it is not all of the time, as there is bloodvessels in this pleura and so more air must be pumped in from time to time.

Earwigs Deserve Publicity

An old gentleman hailed me on the street to-day to ask whether I had heard the good news. I said I hadn't. He said that was always the way with the newspapers, they never published the important news, only a lot of stuff about the war in China and Spain.

They never publish the news about the war on earwigs, he said. Yet most householders were far more concerned, he said, with the progress of earwigs in the garden at this time of year than in the progress of the Japanese, Chinese and Spanish armies. After all, he said, a Japanese victory over China is merely something in a newspaper, but if you get earwigs in your dahlias, in your rugs or even in your bath tub, that is something actual, tangible and highly personal.

Then he revealed to me an important news scoop which the newspapers so far have overlooked. He said the spiders of this district had just discovered the earwigs as a choice food and had started in to clean them in billions. Up to this year he said, the spiders would not look at an earwig, but, like the first human to tackle an oyster or a lobster, a daring spider recently sampled an earwig. He found it a rare treat and told his friends.

Since then, my informant said, the spiders have turned their attention seriously to the earwig harvest and it is proceeding at a rapid pace. Two spiders have taken up residence in his park here he said, and every night the fool earwigs come up there in droves, but they never come out again. In the morning nothing is left but their hard, shiny shells.

So at this rate if we can only keep the spiders going, all the earwigs will be eaten in a few years, the old man said, and this will be more important to us than the fate of China and Spain. — Bruce Hutchinson in Victoria Times.

You Can Whistle While You Fish

There are two distinct classes of fishermen; the experienced and the inexperienced. The former is an enthusiast who not only knows the game but has also made a study of the habits of the different species and, combining that knowledge with experience, knows how to outwit them. The inexperienced is usually either a beginner or a casual angler who fishes when the opportunity presents itself, but makes no effort to acquire proficiency at the art. And there are certain fish that the veteran tyro can catch without difficulty, while to be successful in taking others, one must know the habits of the fish and adopt one's technique to the existing conditions. This is particularly true of speckled trout fishing and is quite as applicable in the catches made by professional and experienced fishermen on the same stream. For the benefit of those whose experience of trout fishing is not extensive, we quote some excellent counsel from the California Fish and Game Bulletin:

"All too many fishermen walk up to a trout pool with no more care than they would use in walking to the corner drug store, and wonder why they never seem to get a bite. Move as carefully as though you were stalking game and you will be rewarded better than.

"If the water surface is glassy smooth, stay back of a bush, tree or tree. If you can't do that, stay in dense shade and move slowly. If there is no shade, crouch low, on hands and knees, or at least conceal yourself as much as possible. Keep your shadow off the water. Avoid casting your shadow upon the place where you are fishing.

"Remember that trout have into the habit of taking a trout at less likely to notice you when you are behind him.

"Often, in spite of every care you can take, you will frighten the fish when the water is usually best to move on, but sometime the fishing there will be worth waiting for. Get yourself a comfortable position and wait awhile. Usually the life of the pool will return to normal within five to 15 minutes and you can get results.

"Talk, shout or sing, all you please, but walk quietly. If the stream is quiet and unbroken, take your position slowly and lightly, and remember that the ground carries sounds for a long distance, so that even with undercut banks is the very hardest to approach. In a four-cornered pool your very best efforts may not be enough. In places where the water is tumbling or noisy, you do not need to be nearly so careful."—Bulletin Dept. Game & Fisheries.

Pies of Pioneer Days

FROM THE HOMES OF WILLIS, Kan., comes wafting a brief but thoughtprovoking report of the annual pioneerous fourth of July oration delivered there by former Governor Alfred M. Landon. "Pies, cakes, cookies built this state," Mr. Landon is quoted as saying, "not cafeteria. They had fire—fire in their bellies."

By "cookie" it is presumed that the former Republican nominee did not mean "cookie" as in "cookie" edible, preferably flavoured with caraway seeds, which one may buy in store stocks on pantry shelves. He referred to the time-tested mak, sometimes round and always crisp, who presided over the kitchen stove, wagon or fire when men were men and cattle were cattle. He referred, also unintentionally, the possibility of what may be called the culinary interpretation of history — or following the Marxian analogy, culinary determinism.

The cooking that put fire into the vitals of America's pioneers, builders, railroad builders, prairie breakers, city founders river pioneers was plain, nourishing and robust. The first stones of our national edifice were laid on Indian corn, salt fish, wild fowl and venison. The humble bean and the cabbage were the source of the empire.

The New England pies and doughnuts made the inhabitants of the Middle West conscious of the joy and dream of hell fire all night.

The hoecake with a lump inside the dreaming southerner. The frying pan became almost a household emblem. Flop and hoecake, pork and beans, Indian puddings, salt bass and salt fish, dried fruits, root vegetables—on these, calling for little variety, exertions of the gastric juices, we built our national greatness.

Not that we can indeed, foreign food of any sort—we long manfully resisted. Spaghetti and chop suey would stick to our ribs. All typically American foods, from succotash to corn on the cob, were solid. Clarence Day's immortal father got up from four-course meals to say, "I must into the library with his cigar and newspaper." We have become a little set more sparingly today. That may be what is the matter with us. Some have made a specialty for the doctor's degree at Columbia, Harvard, Yale, Princeton or the University of Chicago will write a thesis on it, and it is true as many as this nation rests firmly on a foundation

Cause of dyspepsia. Overeating, he will agree, produced a sense of inferiority, which could be overcome only by the most prodigious exertion. We still trace a more somber psychological linkage between pie and pioneer. Who knows. He may be right. New York Times.

"Doing Down" for Winter

The home canning season has made its annual reappearance upon the domestic scene and everywhere kitchens are busy places as fruit jars and kettles receive their delicious contents for the coming winter. Probably among the first were the strawberries which were quickly turned into that delicious concoction of jam and preserve. At present the cherries and currants.

Later on as the season of harvest progresses, the busy housewife will be occupied with "doing up" or "putting down" peaches, pears, tomatoes, chili sauce and vegetables. These will be part of many a "piece of pantry shelf" to be opened later when the snow of winter has ended the garden. Then will be indeed appreciated the efforts of the fond mother who slaved over the hot stove and stewing kettle during the idle in the summer heat, preparing those delicacies.

In grandmother's day, it was of paramount importance that the art of canning and preserving be well understood by all women and girls. Many of the commercially prepared products of to-day were then unheard of and the card of quality which they now possess.

Today however, Mrs. John Public can telephone her grocer and obtain almost any order a wide variety of fruits, vegetables and preserves, both in the form of jams and jellies, government inspection and specifications have removed to great measure the uncertainty which formerly attended such purchases. The economiseness of the goods are preserved throughout the process.

In spite of all that can now be purchased ready for the table, it is generally to be hoped that the art of home canning will long continue as a household art in the Canadian home.—Oshawa Times.

2 Gold Bricks, Life Savings, Tangled in Law

Buffalo, N.Y., Aug. 12—(AP)—An Italian woman and her son yesterday petitioned Henry Morgenthau, secretary of the United States treasury, for aid to save their life savings—two gold bricks —from seizure.

Because Italy forbids taking money out of the country, Mrs. Virginia Venturoli and her son Robert, invested their savings, $1,264, in two gold bricks and passed through Italian customs.

Upon arrival in the United States Mrs. Venturoli attempted to cash the bricks at the Federal Reserve Bank and found her savings hopelessly enmeshed in the United States law. Questioning developed Mrs. Venturoli had not declared the gold at the United States Customs because she thought it was "just the same as money and did not need to be declared."

Now only intervention by the Treasury Department can save the gold from seizure.

Fairness is the Goal For Complexion Now

ROSEMAR Y LANE

Protects her fair skin from too much suntan.

(By HELEN FOLLETT)

GOODBY SUNTAN: we're getting tired of you. Enough is altogether too much. Autumn will be on the wing soon we'll be yearning for fair complexions. So stay with toasted chins, bronze noses, freckled arms and all the rest of the evidences of Mister Sun's blistering caresses.

It is time now to fight for fairness. You can do it by steaming and oiling treatments. Tan and sunburn have a leathering effect upon the human hide. They take away the natural oils, there is roughness of surface that makes powder stand aloof; it won't settle down in a friendly manner. Something must be done.

At night wash the face thoroughly with a bland soap and warm water. Rinse the suds away, dip a washcloth in water fairly hot, sap it on, hold snugly with flattened palms. Give the flesh a two-minute steaming.

Rinse with ice-cold water. Dry gently; the complexion should be treated gently always. Frisk over the surface with in ice cube, dry again. Then apply a tonic cream, slapping it in with the finger tips.

Unless the hair is shampooed, freshly don't spray perfume in it. The sebacic glands of the scalp are active in the summer season; they produce chemicals that are not pleasing to the nostrils; perfume makes this odor even more offensive.

Keep your favorite perfume in an atomizer. After the bath spray the neck, arms and shoulders. The warm flesh will hold tight to the powerful fragrance.

Vitamin C is a good friend to the teeth. Include it in the good things you eat and you'll be able to cut down on the dentist's bill.

Our friend is found in orange juice; take some before breakfast. It is in eggs, lettuce and milk. Don't fail to eat two vegetables each day. Milk contains calcium which is necessary for the well being of teeth.

Eve

By ELEANOR C. ROENIG

Eve walked correctly along the stretch that lay between her boarding place and the office, although she was scarcely conscious of this, or, for that matter, that she walked at all. So much for habit. The route was uninteresting enough, and somewhat dreary, until she came to the boulevard, along the side of which the dignified office building stood.

The boulevard at this time in the morning was alive with color. Young and old office-bound men and women passed in constant streams. Cars of all descriptions, perhaps with trim roadsters predominating, attracted Eve's beautiful, tired eyes.

"It certainly needs a handsome young man in order to make a car," she mentally registered, as her gaze lingered on the occupant of an expensive two-seater. She was too tired to think of the name of it, but knew it was the most expensive car on the avenue. She also had learned the name of the occupant, having seen him at intervals for two years. He was almost a millionaire, she had heard; and if she had not been too tired the Sunday before, she would have read in the paper that he had recently become engaged.

As she neared the office door she was aware of Miss Philman coming toward her, Lately she had felt that she could not tolerate Miss Philman. She simply detested her brown kiln stockings and low shoes and inconsistently ankle length dress.

She was glad the trim roadster stopped at that very moment. He leaned out and said cheerfully:

"Good morning, girl—"

"Good morning yourself," she merrily flung back.

"You're not going in there this morning," he said, playfully surprised. "Come along with me. It's so long since I've seen you—"

"I should say I'm not going in," she merrily screeched back, knowing Miss Philman must now simply stare and glare.

They were off on velvet-shod wheels over the wide boulevard, into the tree-arched avenue beyond.

"Thank you so much and so much for the violets and the candy and the flowers, she said to him simply as she watched him skillfully manipulate the wheel.

"You received them all, then? They were nothing," he murmured. She nestled softly against him.

"I have something with me—you can guess what. But it will be for on until we reach the house."

"You've really found a house?" she queried softly.

"Yes, but first we'll ride on and on and have lunch. Then we'll come back and find the house in the twilight."

The table with the white linen and the gleaming silver was reached daisy after the long hot day.

"Your dress is lovely, such a soft green shade, and of such exquisite material," he told her softly.

"Why, that's just what I thought when I bought it. I thought they made some mistake, for it really is inexpensive."

"Were you lonesome for me?" he asked.

"Oh, so lonesome," she murmured across the cut glass vase that came in through the window.

"The rest must wait until we reach the house," he said decisively. They were soon there, it seemed to Eve, was just what she wanted. They would search no further.

The furnishings seemed to spring up in each lovely room they passed through.

"Darling, there's this," he told her, kissing her as he said the words.

The ring was almost too beautiful and too expensive.

"But I can well afford it, and there will be more than this—soon. Now, can you guess what I mean?"

"Oh, just this," she replied, "and pictures and lovely books and saving for a—a—baby carriage."

"They will be all yours, of course," he assured her, and cuddled and see where your garden will be, and the plans for the house."

She looked out on the most beautiful garden in the world. "Oh I could be happy in a home of the flowers. Perhaps I'll give them names."

"We'll call one after you, 'Breath of Morning'."

Miss Loveman, may I open the door?" twittered Miss Philman. "I noticed it's been closed all morning, but I have heard your typewriter going so." She stood there in a friendly and appraising face.

"I didn't stop to think that I had closed the door," said Miss Philman's assistant. "Of course you may open it."

"Shall we read back the typed matter before you go to lunch?" inquired Miss Philman.

"Why, no; I'd like to look it over myself, first. Still, I suppose it'll all right. My hands seem to run along, whether I stop to think of what I am writing or not. It's habit, I know."

"Never mind," a voice came twittering from the closet, "tomorrow your vacation begins."

Permit Child Privacy in The Home

Unwise For a Mother to Keep a Constant Check on Offspring

(By LISA GRENVILLE)

THERE WAS never a time, day or night, when Mother might not walk into Sarah's or Freddy's room without warning. Sometimes it was to scold or remind them about something; sometimes it was just to have a look around or to say hello. She might appear any time, whenever she felt like it—regardless of how Sarah or Freddy felt about it.

And she always expected respectful attention, even if Sarah were writing a letter to her first beau; even if Freddy were intent on repairing a train toy.

Mother always liked, she said, to know where the children were and what they were doing. She liked to be sure that they were asleep, doing their lessons, were not up to mischief, not crying—or something.

But some children are unusual—like some grown-ups. They like to cry alone. They don't want anyone, not even Mother, to see them in their weaker moments. If they do want Mother's comfort, they'll seek it themselves.

Can't Force Comfort

"Mother—don't you ever want to be alone?" Sarah cried one day in desperation.

Then comfort, if forced on one, is no comfort. If Sarah had wanted comfort or companionship she'd have stayed in the living room, not retired to her own room.

Apart from food and shelter, there is perhaps no greater human need than privacy—a place to be alone in, where no one can look at you, or ask you questions.

Don't you like to be alone sometimes? Don't you ever want to get away, by yourself, where it's quiet, where nothing is demanded of you, not even patience and a smile? Of course you do.

There is nothing I can think of that pulls such an unhappy strain on family relationships as the feeling on the children's part that they can have no privacy, that they can never get away from Mother, that wherever they are she will hunt them out—even in the cellar.

Of course, you have to keep an eye on small children. But you can make it a very unobtrusive eye. And if dangerous implements are removed, why not leave them alone in their own room once in a while?

Something different is found in a new suit of copper color woollen, on jacket is a removable scarf of tawny cross fox set on as the yoke that gives the impression of a lace blouse under the jacket.

Dance away the hours in a lovely sandal of black alligator piped in patent, the front quarter just one broad strapjoe band. The ankle strap fastens at back and is finished with a black tassel.

You won't resist the new autumn gloves, for they are nicer than ever. A new model has powder blue cuff for the back and dark blue suede for the palm with dark blue saddle stitching.

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Husband's Necessary Absence at Night Distasteful to Wife

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We've been married four years, have two lovely children, and used to be very happy. Shortly after our marriage, my husband joined an organization which meets once a week. Bouh he and his brother put this organization ahead of their families, and say so. The rest of the week my husband and his brother are obliged to work evenings at their business, which is commercial.

So, there are only two nights a week when they have a little home life. It seems to me that my husband is taking a big chance at losing his wife and family. I am afraid that while I am playing "widow" five nights a week, I'll find someone who may offer me a little brighter life than my husband does. You know the far fields are always greener.

The longer I live with my husband the more I dread leaving him, and the more, it seems, we are losing precious time, together.

Lonely

From the full text of your letter which is much too long to print, I'm afraid you're being sorry for yourself without any real reason. You tell me how generous your husband is in money matters, and that he and his brother work at their business four evenings a week. That, my dear, is to make you and the children more comfortable. And surely, one evening over to his club, which you tell me so many good things about, that it's pledged to character-building and mutual assistance, seems all to the good to me.

Suppose it was a blonde— there are hundreds of women who would be glad to entertain places with him.

Too Young to Run Away From Home

Dear Miss Fairfax:

In a couple of months I shall be 17 years old. I am most girls of my age, I like to go out and have good times. But my family is very strict, and I'm not allowed to go out in the evenings. However, once in a great, while I am allowed to go to my going out, but I have to be home by eleven o'clock. I have a foreign-born and do not understand American ways.

Now I have a job. Job as usher in a theatre quite a distance from home. Of course, my family won't hear of my being alone in a big city, so I am thinking of running away to accept this offer. I know I am leading a unbearable. Please tell me if I should take the dull road on which I am now plodding or the road which might bring me my fate.

"Desperate"

Eighteen is pretty young for a girl to go to a distant city and take the job you mention. Your letter was written and mailed before you not wait a year or two before recording to accept such a position.

In the meantime look up the vocational training and adult education classes that are now offered, and offer typing, stenography, card-indexing, hotel training, nursing, and office work. Your proficiency in any of these things will bring better pay than will the job you have time.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Beach Manners

"The sea and sky and eternal out-of-doors"—what do they do to your manners? Are your manners so well grounded that they don't blow out to sea the minute you set your foot on summer sands? Do you conduct yourself with the good taste and mannerly restraint that you would use in any other public place?

Or, the minute you put on a bathing-suit, do you check your manners in the bath house?

Not to make yourself conspicuous, not to attract unfavorable attention to yourself or to others . . . these are the fundamental rules for decent manners on a beach. First, watch your voice: don't talk loudly, don't yell across the open space, don't laugh hilariously.

Let's consider some of the other things that make people conspicuous on the beach. How about the boy who sprawls on the sand with his arms wrapped around his knees? Or a girl who sprawls on the sand with her head in a boy's lap. Unbecoming, unattractive postures, gross behaviour . . . . too often we are forced to see these embarrassing demonstrations of ill breeding.

About bathing suits? The style of them, the yardage of them, the color of them—these aren't a important as their appropriateness to you, their becomingness to you. If you are young and pretty and have a figure divine, you and your swimming suit are fortunate. But if you are not so young, or if there are roundities to be considered, keep in mind that inconspicuous and "becoming" when you choose your suit.

Letter of Resignation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been a member of the—— club for about many years and now I would like to resign.

Please tell me how to write my resignation, also to whom it should be addressed?

G.

Your letter of resignation should be written to the secretary of the club, with the request that your letter be presented to the board or to the committee. You don't tell me why you are resigning, but, if possible, it is well to give a reason for your resigning.

Your letter might read:

Dear Mrs. Allen,

To my deep regret I find it necessary to resign from the ——Club, and I am writing to ask you if you will be so kind as to present my resignation to the board of directors at its next meeting. Only the pressure of long-standing scheduled days would make me sever my connection with this splendid organization. For in the meetings and in the friendships I have had special happiness. Maybe you will allow me to "drop in" sometimes on the meetings . . . . will you. That would give me great pleasure.

The friendliest greetings to you and the other members, and my appreciation of your goodness to me.

Most sincerely yours,

Mary Emilh Graham

CANADIAN ARMY PRACTISES FOR WAR GAMES AT CAMP BORDEN

War games, favorite pastime of most European nations, finally reach Canada with units from every section of the Dominion gathered at Camp Borden, near Barrie, Ont., to demonstrate the progress that has been made in equipping the country's fighting forces. There is no suggestion that the manoeuvres will match anything that more militant nations put on—in fact most of the equipment with which the units are supplied is admittedly near-obsolete. It is generally believed, however, that the manoeuvres will point the way to more effective modernization and mechanization of Canada's army. In meantime the troops go through their practice routine; the tanks go up and the trees go down, LEFT. Typical of the small, light and gunless tanks predominant at the camp is the one at RIGHT which shows, nevertheless, it can negotiate rough ground. First aid is not forgotten and the unit below demonstrates field rescue on the "war-scarred" Camp Borden terrain. The actual exercises begin on August 29.

NEW "PROHIBITED AREAS" GUARD GERMANY

Creation of new "prohibited areas" blanketing the eastern frontiers and the northern coasts of Germany leads to the assumption that a vast ring of land and sea defences protecting Germany on all sides is nearing completion. Placing of emphasis on the Czechoslovakian frontier came on the eve of Lord Runciman's arrival in Czechoslovakia from London to try to mediate the Sudeten German controversy.

SOME DAY THESE TUNNELS WILL IRRIGATE 120,000 ACRES

Some day enough water will pass through these 12 tunnels, connecting a pumping plant at the Grand Coulee dam, in Washington state, with a canal and reservoir in the Grand Coulee, to irrigate 120,000 acres of land. At present the tunnels are being driven only 36 feet into the granite canyon wall. When the construction of irrigation facilities is authorized, the 12 tunnels will be driven 800 feet to an open canal, from which water will flow by gravity to the largest tract of irrigable land remaining in America. The pumping plant will ultimately require 660,000 horsepower to operate it. All of this will be generated from the summer flood-waters of the Columbia river.

Chin, Head and Swing

A pupil of mine who has been somewhat puzzled about the length of time he should keep his chin pointed back of the ball came to me the other day with the observation didn't keep their chins back as long as I suggested.

I had told this pupil to keep his head in position after he had hit the ball and counted slowly up to three. My instructions didn't seem consistent with the performances of players he watched. Obviously, they didn't keep their chins back for any length of time. I explained that it wasn't the length of time the chin was kept back, as measured by the clock, which mattered, but the position of the head in relation to the progress of the swing.

The important thing is to have the head in position until well after the ball has been hit. Some swings take no more than a second or two to make, especially with the faster playing stars, so that these players do not keep their chins back as long as a slower performer, but Regardless of how much time is needed for the whole swing a certain part of that time must find the chin pointed back of the ball. Since the average player takes much more time to make his swing, it seems like an eternity if he keeps his chin back until the swing is finished, yet this is the only way he can be successful.

City Final Terminates in Draw; Yankees Extend Lead as Tribe Loses Two

Thrilling Rallies are Seen in Last Two Frames as Batters Assume the Leading Roles

Corbys Score 6 in Eighth to Take Lead; Cementmen Knot Count in 9th

SCORE 15 7 ALL

Cy Barrige's Homer is Big Factor, Darkness Then Intervenes

The uncertainty of the game is what makes it popular.

Just when the pitchers seemed to have complete control of the situation the batters moved to the forefront of the picture and turned the tables with the result that the final game of the City League Softball finals between Corby's A.C. and Point Anne at Coleman Field last evening, was abruptly terminated amid tense excitement on account of darkness, with the score standing all even at 7 to 7 and the teams will resume activities at Coleman Flats tonight to commence all over again.

Frank Sedores "cementmen" took a mid-game lead and seeped headed towards certain victory, but with Johnnie Bawden showing a nice change of pace, on the Point Anne mound he silenced the slugging Corbys bats when suddenly Chuck Barnett's "Sky Corbys" unleashed an eighth inning barrage with the result that when the dust had settled, Corbys had put across six more runs, but were leading 7 to 5. With their backs to the wall and fighting what seemed to be certain defeat, the "cementmen" rallied in the ninth. Harold Dreyer led off with a run in a last inning rally to tie the score, following which Umpire Thomas stepped into the picture and called the game on account of impending darkness.

Torrid Tussle

The tussle was nerve-wracking throughout, until Point Anne notched a brace of runs in the eighth to make the count 6 to 2 in their favour. The most biased Corby fan's heart sank to low depths as defeat seemed inevitable. But the show was far from over. Gray opened the eighth with a three-bagger, singled on Old McGuire and Tapp in succession and before the side was Dracup popped to short, but on a fielder's choice all were safe when Cy Barrige walked to the plate with determination registered in his eye. He didn't fail. Cy came through with a home run, that scored three and put Corbys one up.

Kizer tripled and Reid singled to make the score turn upside down, insofar as Point Anne was concerned, and Corbys were leading for the first time in the game, the count then being 7 to 6.

Frank Sedore's boys were far from whipped, however. With only the ninth frame left and with two out, Dracup walked Whitehead, who took second on Bawden's timely double. Bawden advanced on a passed ball and scored on Dreyer's infield hit, but Murray went out and the game was over, as far as the umpire was concerned, although Corby's registered plenty of complaints when Umpire Bawden called Genereaux safe at first in the clutch.

Barrige Comes Thru

Of course Cy Barrige's circuit blow was the big moment-of-zest of the game and he got a single in the fifth as well. McMartin with a double and two singles led the Corbys while Kizer and McGuire also had a brace of hits and Gray a triple. Genereaux had three hits for Point Anne while Murray's home run in the fourth was supplemented with a nice single that entered into the scoring column in the eighth. Bawden had a brace of hits to help his own cause and scored two runs.

With the exception of the eighth when Corbys hit hard Bawden had the situation well in hand hurling steady ball possessing a change of pace that was baffling. Each hurler struck out three. Dracup was touched for nine hits while Bawden yielded 11, but were scattered. Corbys got runners aboard in every frame, except the second and ninth, while the second, third and fifth saw no Cementmen on base.

TOMMY POINTER IS IN HOSPITAL

Former Belleville Pitcher Badly Burned at Port Hope

Tommy Pointer, native son of Belleville and today ace pitcher of the Port Hope intermediate baseball team, is in hospital suffering from severe scalds and will be out of the game for at least two weeks.

Information given to this paper by the physician in attendance, Dr. F. W. Diamond, Port Hope, is to the effect that Pointer's injuries are "quite severe" on both arms, the abdomen and back. It is expected that he will be in hospital for about a week and will not be fit to play for at least 14 days.

Pointer, who is employed on the night staff at the Dadium Refining plant of Eldorado Mines Limited, is reported to have been injured owing to the bursting of a steam pipe shortly after midnight on Tuesday night. Dr. Diamond was called immediately and the injured man rushed to hospital.

Yachting

Waterlown, N.Y., Aug. 12 (CP)—Professor Douglas Jemmett of the Kingston, Ont., Yacht Club yesterday won the Diamond Jubilee rigged dinghey race and Barry Dalton of the same club won Interlake cat-rigged dinghey class in the opening of the first annual eastern yachting circuit regatta.

Dr. W. Bird of Gananoque was second in the sloop-rigged class while W. Eddy, C. Nabec and P. Wright, of Kingston, were second in order behind him. Prof. Jemmett's winning margin was by 30 seconds.

Barry Dalton of Mr. Jemmett of Kingston was second; C. Hammond, Crescent, third and H. Schwam of Kingston, fourth. Dalton and Jemmett were less than 20 seconds apart.

Most of the visiting yachts arrived here yesterday and were entertained by Crescent members. The race to Clayton starts Friday.

NAPANEE AND LOCOS PLAY 4 TO 4 TIE

Napanee, Aug. 12—Napanee Clippers and Kingston Locos went nine innings to end in a 4 to 4 deadlock here last night in a Bay of Quinte intermediate game. Locos were one up as Napanee went to bat in the ninth following a three-run splurge in the previous inning, but Walt Gerow cleanly to left to score Curry, who was on second as a result of a close play at first and an unmolested steal.

Bell held Kingston to one hit until he weakened in the eighth and safeties by G. Arnied and Clark were followed by Gerow's timely triple far out to the right field fence to tie the count, when Cosgrove walked. Spratt came in to pitch, and when Udel hit to third, Urnoski was out at the plate but Abber Joyce drove Cosgrave in before Boyd could get to end the Kingston scoring.

Gerow and Bendley led the Napanee attack, batted in all the local runs, Joyce and Utronki duplicating for Kingston.

Cleveland Hurlers Fold Up To Satisfaction of Yanks, Who Enjoy 6 1-2 Game Lead

Browns Down Indians Twice While Yanks Handed Victory

DIMAGGIO HOMERS

Reds Nip Cubs Chance to Move Up, Game Goes 14 Innings

(By Sid Feder, Associated Press Sports Writer)

Taking it by and large, those Cleveland pitchers certainly picked a fine time to fold up.

The New York Yankees, now 6 1-2 games in front of the American League pack, will tell you the Tribe elbowers couldn't have chosen a better spot to collapse like an old wildcat oil stock and just about toll their way out of the pennant picture.

First it was young Bobby Feller who began getting clobbered around, and lost a "crooshal" one to the Yankees. Monday Lefty Gomez couldn't take it any longer. Then Mel Harder's comeback went blooey in a big Washington.

And finally, Oscar Vitt, who wasn't used to that sort of thing —especially not after the pleasant experience of piloting Newark's "wonder team" to an international League pennant by 25 1-2 games last season—sent young Al Milnar and old Willis Hudlin to the wars yesterday against the staggering St. Louis Browns, and the same thing happened to them.

Then Lee Stein, whose last well-pitched game is second and the memory of the oldest inhabitant, hurled a six-hitter and Cubby Street's lads cleaned for an 8-2 decision.

Yanks Handed Win

Since the Yankees were virtually handed a 9-5 victory by Washington Senators, this twin setback dropped the Tribe to second and a half farther back in the race. The Yanks gained only five full days if three Senators' pitchers, but pesky on balls, enemy errors a field, and Joe DiMaggio's three-run homer were enough to give them the decision without much trouble.

While the Brownies belted the offerings of Monte Stratton's four-hitter that gave Chicago White Sox a 12-1 decision over Detroit Tigers, there wasn't much action left for the National League yesterday.

Only one game got by old man Weather, Cincinnati Reds nipped Chicago Cubs 8-7 in that one when Ernie Lombardi whacked a homer in the 14th inning to break up the ball game. By the setback, the Cubs lost a chance to move into a second place tie with the idle New York Giants.

CALLING 'EM
Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

Local disciples of Izaak Walton have reported numerous splendid catches of the elusive finny beauties this year; as a matter of fact the current angling season has been slightly more prolific than for several years, but when it comes to records, well there are some old angling records that have stood for three sores and ten years. For instance the brawniest perch ever caught with rod and reel was a yellow perch weighing 4 pounds 2½ ounces, length 16 inches, by Dr. C. C. Abbott, while fishing near Roedestown, N.J., May, 1907, which means this record has stood for 72 years, despite tales from worthy anglers, whose catches were not measured, they hold. The largest white perch weighed 3 pounds and 15 ounces and was also 16 inches long. It was caught by Edward Thode, August 7th, 1890, in Lake Sebastick, near Newport, Maine. Locally anglers are not go in for perch fishing, but the surrounding waters are productive of good bass, lunge, pickerel and trout fishing as can be found on this continent.

"A ball game is never over until the last out is made," whoever penned that phrase should have been at last night's game at Corbys, as it has been proven beyond a shadow of a doubt. It is seldom things happen quite so fast in the usual run of softball matches, as occurred last night. For the first few innings the pitchers dominated, but with the batters getting no place fast, with the odd exception of course. Point Anne were leading 2-1 going into the eighth, when they added two more and it appeared the curtains for Corbys, as Johnnie Bawden was coasting along nicely. Suddenly Corby's unleashed a terrific batting barrage, that netted them six runs and the lead, all of which was capped off with Cy Barrige's mighty circuit blow, that put Corbys in the lead and seemingly in the money.

Now the picture changes—Frank Sedore's Point Anne lads are two down. Corby's got the first two batters in the ninth and it's all over but the shouting, but—with a walk, Bawden helps his own cause with a double, takes all advantages and later scores to knot the count when a close decision gives Point Anne a tie, but there's no more scoring and wisely Umpire Thomas calls it a day. With the exception of seeing a good softball game, little has been gained, except numerous arguments, that might have developed, but for no good apparent reason, as there was no heat. At any rate the two squads are back where they started from last night, so the league executive stepped in and ordered last night's game replayed tonight at Coleman Flats when Stan Laffman will hurl for the "Cementmen" and either Connie Harris or Eddie Schrieder for Corbys.

In his customary inimitable manner and always to courteous, the Peterboro' scribe comes to bat with the following article, which leaves much room for cheer, and says:

"Percy Ken Colling of the Bay of Quinte intermediate ball loop —he's head usage in the C.O.B.L. loop, as well as being a resident in Belleville (hey, is he important!) —is on the spot again, Kingston, where he drove in three runs for a game in Belleville the other day for some reason or other, and now the Bellevillians have claimed the contest by default and also declared Loring Cousins on top of the heap, ahead of the Gibbards of Napanee. We fear it will take some prolific persuasion by our steamed—er, that is esteemed—contemporary, to wiggle clear of this jam. A prophet is without profit in his own country and an umpire is without honour in any clime."

"Alas, my friend, methinks you have something there, as a matter of fact the situation is little short of grave and we are looking up the various bus, steamship and railway timetables with marked precision these afternoons, making ready for a quick exit."

Technicians might remind us that Vander Meer is not strictly a rookie in the common acceptance of the term; last year he participated in 19 games for Cincinnati. But this is his first full season, and because of his oft-mentioned no hit succession, he's the king of the kids this year.

Bill Cowley, of Ottawa, and a member of the Boston Bruins of the N.H.L. and the circuit's outstanding utility player last season, was admitted to the Ottawa General Hospital yesterday as the result of injuries received in an automobile. Bill is a brother of Dan Cowley, well-known R.C.A.F. puckster. The injuries were not of such a nature as to impede Bill's hockey activities, it was learned today.

Local baseball runs will be sorry to know Tommy Pointer sustained severe burns while employed at the Radium Company, Port Hope, recently. The injuries are of such a nature as to possibly keep him out of baseball for the remainder of the season, at least for the play-offs. Pointer did a front of the mound job ..... With Joe Louis promising to fight four times next year, it would appear as though four men are in for plenty of ring trouble in the year 1939, as the palmist or seer would term it..... When ever Mickey Cochrane wishes to return to major league ball, there is plenty of openings awaiting him in both leagues

Nine complications were added to the merry mix-up in the Bay of Quinte League—yesterday. In the replay of a postponed game at Napanee, the homesters were forced to come from behind to gain a 4-4 draw with the Kingston Locos. Young Walt Gerow's timely ninth inning drive gained for Napanee their fourth and tying run. Napanee are back in Kingston tonight for the replay of another game. Residential Kingston are quite anxious to play their postponed game with Napanee but have either tomorrow or Monday. The local executive entertain elegant ideas, however, and just when the trouble will all be settled, remains to be seen. If ever.

KITTENS AND YAWN—Just when they were feeling sorry for Vitt's Cleveland mound staff decided to take a few days off, with the sore arms inability to locate the plate and other ailments, that usually ail pitching managers at backache ..... The Indians must have been scalped by their own tomahawks, Percy Cousins, one of the two games versus the lowly Browns yesterday ..... The Senators presented the Yanks with a game to McCarthy's men are now 6½ games out in front of the pack ..... With Joe Louis promising to fight four times next year, it would appear as though four men are in for plenty of ring trouble in the year 1939, as the palmist or seer would term it..... When ever Mickey Cochrane wishes to return to major league ball, there is plenty of openings awaiting him in both leagues

CHAPTER XXIX

Chris had no illusion about his future as he prepared for Europe early that fall. He knew that even with the prestige of Vienna behind him it would be a long uphill climb, and that only gradually could he abandon general practice for surgery. His money would go so far and no farther. It would provide for Lily Walters's while he a downtown office on his return. was gone, and with care furnish. Nevertheless he went about his preparations blithely, got his steamer ticket, bought a steamer trunk. Katie, taking her two weeks' vacation at that time, watched his preparations with tragic eyes.

"You'll never come back, Chris. Not to us, anyhow."

"Nonsense. It's only for as few months."

One day he actually found Lily with a sewing basket, mending his clothes.

"You might be in an accident over there," she said, "and I'd hate you to be found with holes in your socks."

She had a terror of Europe, a terror of anything unknown and unfamiliar. Nevertheless she was more cheerful during those last weeks, and Chris wondered whether she had been hearing from Dick. Then one morning, smiling, she met him at the foot of the stairs and showed him a registered letter containing five ten-dollar bills.

"I always knew he was a good boy," she said. "No matter what Katie says, he doesn't forget me."

"That's fine," he said, with all the conviction he could muster. "Spend it on yourself. He doesn't need a lot of things."

She was very happy that day. She ran next door to tell Miss Barker, who was coming home at lunchtime, found his bed still unmade and a sketchy meal left for him on the table. He was philosophically and said nothing when later on that day she packed in with her arms full of bundles. Soon he would escape all this, and when he came back, he would make some other arrangement. He would continue to take care of her, but to himself would get away.

And then suddenly and without warning it was Lily who went away, taking herself out of his life so utterly as to make her that even Chris, accustomed to such tragedies, was sick and cold with the sheer despair of it. One night she got a telegram saying that Dick had been arrested for burglary in Chicago and was being held for trial. She read it in the hall, read it over and over. Then she took it in to Chris's office, left it on the desk for him to find in the morning, and carried off with her a bottle of sleeping tablets left by a sample man that day.

She made no other arrangements, left no letters. Apparently she had simply shaken out of the bottle enough to be sure of that she would never awaken, and then gone quietly to bed. When Chris found her, she was lying there, her untidy room littered with clothing she would never wear again, and on the dresser the faded picture of Henry in its broken frame.

It was too late to do anything. She was gone, and Chris stood for some time looking down at her, wondering if he could have prevented it. Then his own impatiences, feeling guilty—as only those who have had a hand with tions and half guilt. In this room and this bed had Henry died. "I'll be back after three years," she had said to you?" And he had promised. Miniged with this was a terrible anger at Dick, his young callousness, his cool selfishness.

He could not break him with his bare hands that morning, with that pitiful wreckage before him; killed in her the weakness which unfitted him for anything but crises; killed him for his cruelty, for his shyness, for being Dick Walters. There was nothing then to tell him that in only a few years he would be fighting to save Dick's life, carrying him through the dark to the roar of guns.

Katie, blank-eyed and dazed, came home from the hospital that day to move like a shadow through the house. She seemed incapable of thought or of action, and Miss Barker, bustling about with more bid activity, finally put her to bed.

"I wish she would cry," she said to Chris out of her own impotence. "It's always better if they do."

It was in the chaos of Miss Barker's house cleaning, in preparation for the funeral, that Chris saw Beverly again, for the first time in more than a year. He came in to find her standing in the back office, a laddy and pails around her and her face white and tired. So unexpectedly was the sight of her that he could find nothing to say.

"You don't mind, do you, Chris? I thought if I could do something—"

"Mind? No, but I imagine everything is being done. It looks like it!"

She was looking at him as if she could not look away, but he was busy pulling out a chair for her.

"Sit down," he said. "I haven't seen you for a long time. How are you?"

"Very well," she said.

But she did not take the chair. She was hearing his voice over the telephone that last night before her marriage. "See here, my darling, if you're such an ass of this marriage, it's not too late," and trying to reconcile it with his present tone, carefully casual as it was and without feeling.

"I hear that you are going abroad to study."

Her own voice was breathless but she did not notice it.

"Yes. Very soon."

"You'll like Vienna. Every one does."

"I hope so. My German's pretty rusty."

Why had he never answered that letter of hers? If only she could have had it then, even now! But not ask this new Chris, casual and kind and detached. He was too far away.

"Would you mind if I sent some flowers from the garden? We still have a good many."

Ah, but that was a mistake, that mention of the garden. Chris finding her crying there and taking her in his arms. She saw him stiffen.

"Thanks. That would be fine."

Then it was over, and he was seeing her out, friendly, and smiling. She was smiling, too. They even shook hands, and she wished him a good journey and a good winter. She went back up the hill to her friends and her dinners, to occasional silent meals with her father at the head of the table and, up more than occasional nights when she lay awake for hours listening until Jerry's car came in. For no one knew now that this was the way it was to be, and that it would not change.

She did not go to the funeral the next day. For an hour or so Lily was brought down to lie in state in the front office, a few flowers gathered, and in the back room Katie sat beside Chris and listened to the service, holding tight to his hand.

"Only the two of us left, Chris!"

"She's still here now, Katie. Asleep or awake, she's all right."

"But I'm alone, Chris. You're going away, and I'll be alone."

"Hush, dear. Listen."

"I am the resurrection, and the life, saith the Lord; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Lily lying there in her new dignity; Katie holding Chris's hand and more conscious of it than of her mother in the next room; and Chris looking back at his failures and God knows what—that was Lily Walters' funeral.

When it was over, he stayed behind to put those flowers of Beverly's on the mound and to gaze across to where Annie Lee's lay in majestic pomp in her marble tomb. Two women, far apart in life, and now meeting in this common resting place.

Katie stayed home for a day or two, her exuberant vitality gone, eating little and sleeping badly. For the sake of propriety Miss Barker remained in the house at night, using Dick's old room; but in the daytime Katie was there alone, a pathetic figure, wandering about the house and watching Chris's preparations for departure with desperate, red-rimmed eyes.

"You can't go and leave me like this, Chris."

"Nonsense. You'll be busy, my dear. I'm not leaving you homeless."

"A hospital isn't a home."

He was relieved when the night came for him to go. Everything was done. Ted Lawrence was taking over his practice for the spring, and in his absence, and early in the evening Chris had handed him the keys to the flats. Miss Barker's draws had been in, bringing him for some unknown reason a large bunch of roses, and he had said wryly. He had seen Ursula, strong again, the proud old baby. They'd miss you, Doctor. And he'd been gaining every day. In Chicago Dick was safely in jail and awaiting sentence. Chris had even ordered a small bendzone for the child's grave. Now the past was behind him, and he could look ahead. He had run from a part of his race, had reached this particular Rubicon. He had achieved a measure of hope again. Now, in an hour or less—

Katie, looking at his watch when the doorbell rang, and he opened it to find Katie in the vestibule, with a suitcase at her feet. He knew before she spoke that there was trouble, and she looked crushed, defeated, and she was wearing slightly.

"What's all this?" he demanded.

"I've left the hospital, Chris." "What are you talking about?"

"It's true. They would have put me out anyhow, so I left."

She explained, standing among that luggage of his and desperately trying to be coherent. She had made a mistake in the medicines that day; nothing fatal, but they had acted as if she had killed a man. She had stood all she could; then she had told the lot of them what she thought of them and had packed her bag and left.

He stood staring at her, unable at first to face this new problem. A moment ago he had been free. Now—! What on earth to do with her, with that empty house behind him and—remembering Lily—that desperate look in her eyes. He remembered.

"You've been a silly little fool," he told her. "But you're going back, of course. I'll call up Miss Simpson."

"She wouldn't take me back. Anyhow, I'm not going."

He tried to reason with her, still standing in the hall. She couldn't stay in the house, and Miss Barker had gone to the country. He'd leave her at a hotel for the night and arrange for money until she could look for herself. She was not listening, however, and at last his frayed nerves gave way.

"Listen to me," he said savagely. "I've had enough. I'm fed up, and more. What is it to me that you've made a fool of yourself? I haven't adopted you. I'm not married to you. And by the Lord Harry, if this is some scheme of yours to interfere with my plans, I'll leave you here. You can get along. You're young and strong. You can manage. I'm going."

"Some scheme!" she gasped. "You can't think that, Chris." "What am I to think?"

In the end he believed her, however. There was desperate truth in her voice. She had been through a lot, she said; her mother and Dick, and now his going away. Especially his going away. She had hardly known that she was going that day. He had to believe that. She was no killer. Her record was good. But to be left alone like this—

CHAPTER XXX.

Chris still wanted to shake Katie, but he mollified his tone.

"The taxi will be here in a minute or two. I'll take you back and see Miss Simpson. That's all I'll have time to do."

She stiffened stubbornly. "I'm not going back, Chris. I'll kill myself first. Or go on the stage."

"Don't talk like that," he said impatiently. "You don't mean it for a minute."

"I do mean it. I know the ropes now. Probably it's all I'm good for anyhow."

And in that, too, there was the ring of despairing truth. She was capable of anything, this Katie. She was Henry and Lily and even a part of Dick. She stared down at her. She was beyond coquetry. Suddenly he was profoundly sorry for her.

"You'll let me take you back, anyhow, won't you, Katie? When I tell Miss Nettie—"

"Not about Dick! I'll jump off a bridge if you do that."

"Not about Dick," he agreed gravely, and relieved to see her straighten her hat by the hall mirror when the taxi driver rang the bell.

He consulted his watch. There would be just time to go to the hospital, and he put her in the cab and threw in his fares role of the frenzied haste. But in the taxi his anger returned. He sat in forbidding silence hardening his heart against her swollen eyes, her white and trembling mouth. She, too, sat stiff, looked at his watch again, calculating minutes and once when he put his hand over hers he shook it off.

"None of that, Katie. You've nearly wrecked me, and you know it."

He left her outside in the taxi and strode back to Miss Nettie's office door. She was at her desk, looking old and tired, and when she saw him, she needed no explanation.

"I have tried and failed," she told him. "Katie's impossible, and then. I can't take her back. Chris."

"What in heaven's name am I to do with her?" he asked helplessly. "Let her find her own way out. She surely can't be entirely helpless."

"Not the kind of friends to help her that I can see like this. I don't want her to kill herself or to go on the streets."

"Oh, Chris, Chris!" said Miss Nettie helplessly. "What a mess on account of troubles in the world? She's young, and she's ambitious. She's beautiful, too. She has talent to scare you, that's all; and she's succeeded."

"You're right. I am scared."

She compromised finally, offering to keep Katie for a few days until she found something to do. But Chris, going out to the taxi, faced a Katie who refused to do anything except go with him. He got his watch and made a desperate effort to control himself. "I'm late all right," he said. "Then here's where you get out."

He swung the door onto the pavement and stood waiting, but she did not move.

"I'm not going in there," she said quietly. "You can leave me here, but I'll be on the steps when you get back."

Her very quietness was alarming. He stood on the pavement staring at her, at her white face and blank eyes. Then he stood up, climbed back into the taxi and got in himself.

"To the station," he said, and, sitting back in a corner, doggedly faced his problem.

He was savagely angry—at Katie, at the hospital, at Lily itself for this scurvy trick she had played on him. And he knew, too, that there was but one thing to be done, and that was to put the girl out of the cab and go on with his own work, his own life. He knew it, and when she slid over to him and put her head on his shoulder—

"I do love you so much, Chris." "Don't be an idiot, Katie." "And I have nobody else. Nobody in all the world."

"What am I to do with you, child?"

"Take me along," she whispered. "I'll kill myself if you don't. I'll do what mother did. I'm not just talking. I'll go to a drug store and get—"

"Stop it! Stop it. I tell you."

"I'll love you all my life, Chris. Take me with you. I'll look after you. I'd do anything. You don't have to marry me. Just let me go along. If you don't, I'm gone. I'm no good without you. I'm nothing. You can't just go away and leave me. You can't!"

It was within fifteen minutes of train-time then. He said nothing, and at the station he got out and stood looking at her. She did not move.

"If you leave me now, it's good-bye, Chris. I can't go on; not alone."

He was white to the lips when he reached in and, taking her suitcase, gave it to a porter.

He sat up all night in the smoking compartment of the train, his old hope shattered in his teeth. Katie had his be h. and whether she slept or not he could not know or care. Toward morning he got out his book of German medical

Cyclone Hurls Trees About

Kitchener, Ont., Aug. 13—(CP)—A young cyclone flattened a path through this district Wednesday night, hurling barn roofs and big trees about like match sticks amid a torrential rain and almost constant lightning flashes.

The cyclone seemed to start in north east Hope Township; Perth County, where at least half a dozen barns had their roofs removed. One driving shed on the farm of Aaron Cook was removed almost bodily from the structure leaving behind it an overturned car and an assortment of badly bent farm implements.

Want to Know Why You're Constipated?

Would you give a million to shake off that dull, dopey, played-out feeling that often comes with common constipation? Then stop a minute and think!

What have you had to eat this week? Just cereal, bread, eggs, potatoes? Possibly the reason you're constipated is you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean how much you eat. It means a kind of food that isn't entirely digested, but leaves a soft, bulky mass in the intestines which helps a bowel movement.

What to do? Eat some Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast every day. This crunchy toasted cereal is not only an "bulk" food—it contains both the intestinal tonic-vitamin B, and iron.

Eat All-Bran every day, and drink plenty of water. See if you don't get off your heels and on your toes! All-Bran is made by Kellogg in London, Ont.

100 Volunteer Firemen Fight Fire

Campbellford, Ont. Aug. 12—(CP)—More than 100 volunteer firemen formed a bucket brigade to fight a fire yesterday which broke out on the farm of William G. Craighead, of East Seymour, about two miles east of here. Damage estimated at about $3,000 was caused.

The blaze started from sparks caused when a belt snapped off a threshing machine, owned by Harold Fry, and which Craighead was using near his barn. The sparks ignited stacks of wheat and rye. Craighead estimated a loss of 150 bushels of wheat and 100 bushels of rye.

Ewart Anderson, a neighbor, after first soaking himself with water, drove a small tractor into the middle of the blaze and hitched off his machine to the threshing machine. He then pulled the blazing threshing machine into an open field. It was believed his action kept the fire from spreading to the barns and other buildings on Craighead's property, as a strong wind was blowing at the time of the fire.

Mr. and Mrs.—

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking to himself in his private chair and ma said, Willyum how would you like to work out today's bridge problem with me?

My very instinct cries out against it, pop said.

Bridge being his least favorite thing when he can get out of it, and ma said, Well then do it just to be obliging.

As soon as I finish the cigar, pop said, and ma said, All rite, the cigar cant last forever.

No, unfortunately it's an unusually fine one pop said.

And he kept on smoking it with a enjoyable expression, and after a while ma said, Now Willyum come on, your cigar is finished, there's practically nothing left of it.

There's more left than meets the eye, it's still packed with the most delicious flavor, pop said.

And he took some extra careful puffs to keep from burning his mustash, and ma said, Now Willyum I'm not going to wait any longer, there's hardly an 8th of an inch of that cigar to distinguish it from nothing.

A good cigar's not down till it's out, pop said. You made an agreement and I expect you to keep it. That's the trouble with the world today, the word of the average private party is no longer as good as his bond, and the vicious circle spreads until entire nations regard silliem treaties as something to be broken instead of kept, with the result that millions of innocent men are dragged into bridge, I mean war. I can make this cigar old butt hold out another 10 minutes by sticking a pin in it, pop said.

With he started to, and ma said, Now Willyum that gives the final blow to the last straw, now I wouldn't do that bridge problem with you if you asked me, now you'll just have to take me to the movies.

Which he did.

'AIRMEN' WIN OVER GRAHAMS IN TRENT LOOP

Flyers Win 21 to 12 to Advance to League Finals

Trenton, Aug. 11.—(Special) — Taking an early lead which they never held but increased throughout the game, the batting R.C.A.F. softball nine, undefeated in the bidding for the local series, made the experts take a back seat tonight when they walloped and thrashed the peppy Graham's Garage nine 21-12 to take the third and deciding tuale of the semi-final play-off series at Bayshore Park tonight. A record crowd attracted largely by the possibility of another blow-up similar to the one Tuesday evening when the Airmen booted the ball to give Graham's another big two run inning, howled and cheered alternately as their favorites carried about the diamond. The local semi-final series has attracted three of the largest crowds of recent years, and if present indications are to be believed the finals which begin Friday will go down in local softball history.

Davis a Puzzle

"Tiny" Davis, the towering moundsman for the Airmen who scrumptiously under the Graham barrage on Tuesday, was in fine fettle, and his speedy deliveries were for the most part rather a puzzle to opposition batters. He struck out several of the most dangerous of the Garagemen's sluggers in the clutches, and was well on top at all times. Not content with that he slapped out a tremendous circuit blow in the eighth when a run more or less hardly mattered. His team-mates were functioning on the eight behind him, and with very few errors chalked up against them the Airmen definitely looked the better of the two teams.

For Graham's Leo Coughlin hurled steady ball but was afforded rather poor support both by the infield and his outfield. Louis LeCompte set an unusual mark when he smacked out two consecutive homers for the Airmen in the third and fourth frames respectively. Annis did likewise in the first with two on and the heavy guns threatened to break out at almost any stage.

Although a majority of the local fans seemed to favour a Graham win many of the steady customers were delighted to see the hard-working Flyers get into the local finals. It is the first time since their entry to the loop that the R.C.A.F. nine have looked as good as they have this year and their chances of beating out Youres Billiards are considered by many to be excellent. However fans will not have to wait long to see the outcome for the two teams go into action Friday, and again Monday, Tuesday, and possibly other nights next week. The final series is a three-out-of-five contest.

ALL EVEN IN PRINCE EDWARD PLAY-OFF SERIES

Wellington Wins 3-2 to Knot Series With Robin's Mills

Rednersville, Aug. 12 (Special)—Wellington baseballers last night the Wellington team eked out a 3-2 victory over Ameliasburg. With the best crowd of the year in attendance it proved to be the most interesting game of the season, with a thrill every inning. B. Moore on the mound for Wellington—at the Lake' crew and Talcott for the Robin's Mills boys provided some interesting pitching. Moore struck out six while Talcott only had two to his credit, each allowed eight hits during the seven frames, however.

Wellington scored one in the second when Moore tripled and then scored on Brimley's single to right. They were able to tally one in the fourth when Moore stole his first time a single but got all the way to third on Talcott's error and crossed the plate on a hit to right by Pritz. They got their winning tally in the sixth when Moore who seemed to have Lady Luck riding with him struck out, but reached first when Thompson let the ball get away from him and then but the runner going to first. He advanced to second on Pritz's infield out, stole third and scored when Saunders laid down a perfect bunt to the pitcher.

Amelisburg scored twice in their half of the second inning, Black singling to right and advancing to third on Talcott's single to the same place and both scored when Jones doubled to centre. The Wellington ball-players settled down after that and Amelisburgs were never able to get a man past the keystone sack for the remaining part of the game.

Wellington observed their win as they had only one error chalked up to them while the Green and Yellow crew allowed three, the error by Thompson letting the winning run on the base path.

The two meet again tomorrow night in Consecon and on the other face elimination, the other to meet the first place Cloverdale team for the cup. It has been a fairly close series each winning home and another night should see a real good game.

The lineups:

Wellington: Houlding cf; Harris 2b; Vandervaart 2b; Burley ss; Moore p; Pritz Saunders rf; Brimley 1b; Ainsworth c.

Amelisburg: Jones 3b; Farley lb; Dixon cf; Wannamaker 3b; Thompson c; Black rf; Talcott p; Ferguson lf; Stinson rf.

HEPBURN MARKS

tax amendments affected the Ontario Succession Duty Act as it was framed so wealthy persons who escaped income and succession duties in Ontario would have to pay duties to their families during their lifetime.

It was not the first time Premier Hepburn had criticized the Dominion government. At the Toronto sittings of the Rowell Commission he stressed what he said was interference of decentralizing government functions in Canada if freedom was to prevail. The central government already had "departed from the well-thumbed practices of parliamentary institutions."

He suggested to the commission the Federal government withdraw from the income-tax field as Ontario and Quebec no longer could be "milch cows" for the rest of the Dominion. He blamed the Prairie Provinces for their own and others' misfortunes through overproduction of wheat and crop specialization.

POLICE COURT

Following a police raid conducted by P.C. Arnott early today, Leo Nolan, Bellevile, appeared before Magistrate F. J. Butler K.C., in local police court this morning, charged with selling liquor. The accused pleaded guilty and was sentenced to two months in the common jail.

"I'm sorry, but there is no alternative to a fine in these cases", Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K.C. told the magistrate when counsel for Nolan asked to deliver two bottles of beer to two men at a point near the upper bridge early today. The officer immediately took Nolan into custody.

Arthur Bartlett and Burton Moores pleaded guilty in writing to charges of speeding and were assessed the minimum fine as provided under the ordinance governing such misdemeanour. A fine of $5.00 and $2.25 costs was collected in each case.

A Madoc resident appeared as charged with driving his motor car while intoxicated. No plea was accepted as the accused requested the counsel of a lawyer.

"Your car will have to be impounded, as the L.C.A. has introduced an amendment whereby persons charged under this section of the act, must have their cars impounded until this case is disposed of" explained Crown Attorney Donnan.

The accused was permitted his liberty upon the security of $500.00 bail provided by himself. The matter was enlarged for one week. Constables Thomson and Arnott appreheended the accused near the police station while driving his car, at 3.00 a.m. today.

A fraud charge that was withdrawn by the prosecution, concluded the court.

Police Blotter

Local and provincial police were notified of the theft of an automobile from Peterborough early today. The vehicle, a 1938 model Ford sedan, carried Ontario licence plate number 37757.

A motor accident, resulting in fender damage only, caused considerable excitement at the main intersection in the city late yesterday afternoon. Edmond Labrecque of Ottawa was driving southerly on Front street and about to make a left hand turn into Bridge street when his car collided with another motor car, about to make a left hand turn at the same intersection. The latter car was driven by Mrs. Dora Denison of New York City. Police arrived to find the damage trivial.

MUCH MOISTURE IN THE GROUND

Though Season Hot, There Is No Need of Hauling Water

In previous drier seasons at this period of the summer, many farmers have been forced to the task of hauling water, in some cases for miles with which to water stock. Wells and even creeks in a good many cases failed to supply the necessary amount of water during the midsummer period. This season, however, plenty of moisture is observed in the ground, so much so that in some sections heavier machinery has been unable to enter the land. Wells are full and creeks are maintaining a high level. Rainfall which has been fairly constant this summer has kept cisterns well supplied, and the matter of family washing is one which has caused little trouble this season, according to the majority of reports.

NEED OF RECREATION

Sunday recreation, carried to modest limits, the opening of playgrounds, and open air sports in healthful nature on the Sabbath, a matter which has aroused considerable discussion in the City of Toronto and other large Ontario municipalities this week, finds enthusiastic support in this city it is observed by official comment.

"Certainly it's all right to open the parks for the kiddies, to allow swimming and other healthful forms of recreation on Sunday. Toronto, which has always had such a namby namby attitude on the matter, is at last waking up," stated Mayor Jamieson Bone this morning.

"I'm all for it. Sunday is the workingman's holiday, the only chance he has to get into the open. Why should a lot of dictators tell him what he should do on his only day? He is able to find recreation and fresh air in the open, according he is generally not able to get all week. I believe he is entitled to it."

Drenches Clothes, Drives into Fire To Rescue Machine

Credit the alertness of a quick-witted resident, Ewart Anderson, whose actions prevented flames from spreading to barns and other buildings, when fire broke out during threshing on the farm of William Craighead, fifty-one Township, near Campbellford yesterday.

Keen to observe the possible seriousness of the fire, Anderson first assisted his chubby wife with water, drove a small tractor into the middle of the raging fire and hitched the machine to the threshing outfit which was enveloped in flames.

Anderson then managed to pull the blazing machine outside the fire area and into an open field. His action prevented the flames from devouring the farm buildings. More than 100 volunteer firemen formed a bucket brigade. Damage was estimated at $2,000. Cause of the fire was a broken belt on the threshing machine.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Induced effects of light-lining! . . . a person looking a wire fence on a wire clothes-us just after a flash and especially after rain is fallen, he may form a discharge path for the electricity to the ground and be severely shocked. The Bureau of Standards describes a common case. A wire clothesline supported by dry wooden posts would have accumulated, immediately after a flash, a charge whose voltage to ground would be about 30,000 volts. This charge is, as the result of its wire being hit, but was induced by lightning at some distance from the wire line. The same results would be produced also on wire fences and unground-ed downspouts. Keep away from them.

Hill Put Between Russians, Japs As Each Side Retires Ninety Yards

Tokyo, Aug. 13—(AP)—The war office announced today that Soviet Russian and Japanese military representatives had signed a memorandum pledging themselves to avoid further incidents over the disputed area on the Siberian-Korean frontier.

The agreement guaranteed both sides would avoid actions likely to break the truce.

Reports on the situation, including the positions of troops and all other details, were communicated to the two governments, the communique said, adding that a map marking troop positions as at the time of the truce probably would be signed today.

PREMIERS THRESH AND TALK OVER PUBLIC ISSUES

Premier Hepburn's Birthday Celebrated on His Farm

DUPLESSIS PRESENT

Both Support Stand of Hon. Dr. Manion on Dominion Relief

St. Thomas, Ont., Aug. 13.—(CP)—The Premiers of Ontario and Quebec, a happy day of pitching oat sheaves and grubbing onions at an Elgin county farm, were engaged today the Dominion government should assume the burden of relief costs.

But Mitchell F. Hepburn of Ontario and Maurice Duplessis, head of Quebec's Union Nationale government, also were of the opinion, expressed by Mr. Duplessis, that the Provinces must have "more autonomy or there cannot be unity in Canada." The Quebec Premier said yesterday "the individual members of a nation must be given their rights or there can be no nation."

Unanimous in Request

The occasion was Premier Hepburn's 42nd birthday celebration, from Quebec, New York and other points came a score of Mr. Hepburn's intimates for an informal get-together which, it was announced, had no political significance. It was "just a birthday party" with no conferences.

Whether or not Premiers Hepburn and Duplessis talked politics, they took time out from driving about the Yarmouth Township farm to express in informal interviews opinions on a host of current questions. Both said they endorsed the attitude of Hon. R. J. Manion, National Conservative Leader, who would recently be believed the federal government should relieve the municipalities of the burden of relief.

'National Spirit'

Mr. Hepburn said his foremost hope for Canada was the development of a "true national spirit," free from sectionalism. He said it is time to create a true national spirit, with the preservation of our democratic institutions, and that Canada will be able to accomplish the betterments Canadians are seeking.

Then the Premiers tried their hand at threshing. Both grabbed bundles and fed the thresher for a few minutes. The crops on the Hepburn Bannockburn farm are good this year. Oats and barley threshed yesterday ran about 47 bushels to

THREE JAPANESE AND U.S. MARINES IN 'GRAVE' AFFAIR

Encounter Marks First Anniversary of Fighting

INCIDENT OVER FLAG

Shanghai, Aug. 13—(AP) —Widespread disorders, including an encounter between three Japanese and United States marines, swept Shanghai today on the first anniversary of the outbreak of fighting in the metropolis.

Japanese authorities described the marines incident as "very grave" and refused to permit news of the encounter to be disseminated in China or Japan.

At least three Chinese were killed and 17 injured in terrorist bombings and other disorders. Arrest of nine persons in the first few hours of the day totalled several score.

Shortly after daylight heavy machine-gun and rifle fire was heard in Pootung, industrial area across the Whangpoo river from Shanghai. This appeared to bear out recent Chinese reports that gunfighting in that area would stage an anniversary attack.

Incidents in Settlement

Most of the incidents, however, occurred in the international settlement, despite precautions of 15,000 police and Shanghai volunteers.

Settlement authorities charged the Japanese army was behind an organized effort to use the anniversary as a means of involving the foreign areas in the conflict.

The encounter between the United States Marines and the Japanese occurred when Secretary Stanley Milton Marvin of San Diego, Calif., came upon a defense force outside his billet in a side street in the United States defence sector.

Dog is Hero, Saves Farmer From Bull

Brockville, Aug. 13.—A young dog proved a hero when he courageously attacked a vicious animal which had knocked down Fred Kerr on Greenbush Road, Leeds County. The bull was about to trample the dazed farmer when the dog, barking furiously, leaped at the animal, nipping the bull and distracting attention from Kerr.

The farmer saw his only chance was to keep moving while his dog kept attacking the bull, and he started to roll along the ground, putting space between himself and the frenzied animal which found itself unable to settle the snapping pup. Finally Kerr reached a point of safety and called his dog which ran to join him.

The farmer was leading the bull to a drinking place when the animal suddenly turned on him and started him down. The dog was so unnerved by his part in the drama that he wouldn't allow children to play with him near the scene of the struggle.

HOMEMADE CANOE USED IN RESCUE AT HEAD RAPIDS

Two Men And Woman in Canoe Upset in Dangerous Rapids

3 BOY RESCUERS

Ottawa, Aug. 13 (CP) — Three boys in a home-made canoe made a daring rescue here today of the head of Deschenes Rapids in Ottawa river when their craft upset and a woman whose canoe had upset.

The rescued trio, Jack Skelly, Jack Moore and Miss Ada Paterson, sister of Morris, were crossing from Deschenes on the Quebec side of the river to Britannia, just west of Ottawa, when their canoe was pulled into the rapids and upset. They found footing on a large rock and their shouts attracted the attention of the boys who were camping on a nearby island.

The rescuers were Edward and Baby Rocque, brothers, and Charles Tongue. They effected the rescue.

Mixedup Distance.

Skelly, Morris and Mrs. Paterson spent the evening in a hotel at Deschenes and were returning to their cottage on the Ontario side when the mishap occurred. They believed they had paddled far enough from the river to escape the pull of the rapids but apparently misjudged the distance in the dark.

When more than half way across the current seized their canoe and swept it quickly down stream into the rapids where it upset. After drifting about 100 yards, hanging on to the upturned canoe they found a rock on which they were able to stand, shoulder deep in water, and brace themselves against the current.

The lads first took Mrs. Paterson to the island and then returned for the two men. They then paddled the three to the Britannia Boating Club on the mainland.

Mechanical Spasm.

In cases of drowning the same mechanism was said to operate and may persist as a spasm after the victim has been brought to safety on shore. This artificial respiration is rendered ineffective.

The Government doctors found that the essential free passage of air to the lungs was prevented by the passage of a catheter, or tubular instrument, through the larynx by the intending physician, and that respiration then became effective. Use of various drugs to counteract the spasm and to promote circulation through the lung also is discussed in the article.

Findings in Blood.

The researchers found that in drowning cases, after an initial rise in the carbon dioxide content of the blood, there was a marked fall content of the blood, there was a marked fall content of the blood, there was a marked fall

Milks Cow into Toeless Shoe, Hobo Drinks His Fill

With a toeless shoe as his goblet, and a cow as his canister, a hobo slipped tactful midnight cocktails near Peterborough the other night as a surprise to the couple hosted on, and wondered.

Strolling near Monaghan Road, a suburb of East Aldrick City a few minutes before midnight, the couple were suddenly surprised by the commotion in nearby bushes. The youth, a six-foot husky, determined to show his lady how brave he was, no swalling, strode into the bushes, but fell back when a dark object came crashing through the undergrowth to meet him. It was a cow.

Further investigation revealed a hobo, silling back against a tree, contentedly sipping a draft from his goblet, that he had just drawn from a frightened black and white "de-canter".

Stamp Series Depicts Wonders Of World

Many Canadian motorists will receive a postcard postmarked from a town which has no postoffice, with a cancellation stamp specially made for Canadian motorists. This card is one of a series going to Canada's citizens through the sponsorship of their Shell dealers. The series, mailed from foreign countries, depicts the seven wonders of the world.

In planning the mailing of these postcards, Shell Oil Company of Canada, decided that, to make the cards valuable, they should be mailed from the town nearest the ancient location of the world wonder pictured on that particular card. One of the wonders, of course, was Hanging Gardens of Babylon, and the nearest town to the former site of the Babylonian wonder is now Hills, Iraq. This tiny village has not, however, a postoffice and this fact presented an obstacle to the Shell mailing plan until the Iraq government agreed to the use of a special cancellation postmark for Hills, Iraq.

Receivers of these Babylon cards will thus possess a genuine "collector's piece"—the only mail matter ever postmarked "Hills, Iraq."

Tomatoes Head Variable Offering of Farm And Garden Produce

PRICES FIRM

Nature's lavish hand in the distribution of a general abundance of crops of farm and garden was again exemplified on the city market today where one of the heaviest displays of the current harvest season was available to Saturday morning shoppers.

In spite of the fact, however, that the market was a blaze of color with the scarlet of the tomato, the yellow of the pumpkin standing out among the multi-colors of other fruits and vegetables, trading was decidedly sluggish during the early hours.

THINKS BONES MAY BE SMALL'S

Speculation Rife Over Finding of Skeleton Near Whitby.

Whitby, Aug. 13—Possibility that the bleached bones of a skeleton found near Lynde's Creek a suburb of Whitby, may be those of Ambrose Small, Toronto theatre magnate who mysteriously disappeared nine teen years ago after depositing a marked cheque for one million dollars in his bank, was investigated today by Acting Police Chief John Thomas of Whitby.

While the act of the skeleton has not been definitely established it is believed to be that of a man of small stature. It is complete and has been handed over to Dr. E. R. Franklin, medico-legal expert.

Close check-up of deaths in the Whitby vicinity by investigating police officers reveal no mysterious disappearances in the district for the past five years. Dr. R. T. MacLaren, coroner, stated the body might have been buried anywhere from twenty to fifty years ago.

The possibility that it might be Ambrose Small occurred to me while we were digging it up," Chief Thomas stated. "In the years to identification marks around the grave, and apparently the body was laid to bed and all possible identification marks removed. It looks like a case of murder. Judging from the way the body was placed in the grave." (The body was found in an upright position.)

The ground in the vicinity of the rough grave is being combed by police today in an effort to discover some identification marks. Situated on a small hill, the grave was revealed by the waters of Lynde's Creek washing away the sandy soil each year until the top of the skull came into view a few days ago.

The skeleton was discovered by three teen-aged boys who were playing in the vicinity. Nobody knows he thought was a flat stone, one of the youngsters picked up. Finding a skull came into view. Further investigation disclosed the skeleton.

Provincial Police Officer W. H. Clark, in charge of investigation, admitted circumstances might in-

Akron Greets Racing Visitors

Bobby Wilson And Others Welcomed in Soap Box Derby City

Akron, Ohio, today was extending its civic welcome to Soap Box Derby racers from Canada, all sections of the United States, and from countries across the sea. The city is extending the hand of friendship also is the many thousands of spectators who will assemble there for the All-American race for the world's championship Derby races.

Foremost among those who have been registered today is Bobbie Wilson, of this city, winner of the Canadian championship races on Derby Hill, a week or so ago in this city, and representative Canada at the international meet. Bobbie was accompanied to Akron yesterday by President Cleo Colling and members of the local Kinsmen Club. Akron and Bobbie are ready to flash the results of the race tomorrow afternoon when the winner gets at two o'clock in the afternoon on Derby Downs.

Whether Bobbie's home made machine is speedy enough to clear the field this city, winner of the other hundreds of United States and foreign racers is a question that only the Kinsmen officials, however, are confident that the entry from the Ontario city will be liberated from the starting line with Sunday.

It will be a gala day in Akron tomorrow. For weeks expert mechanics have been employed in the construction of nine floats which will help make up the parade which will be on parade before the race. The floats will give Akron a cross-section on the tournament of the Roses parade, Pasadena, the Mardi Gras festivities in Philadelphia, the Shriners' parade and others. The Essex Scottish Regiment Band from Windsor, Ont. will lead the bands featured during the parade.

The thousands of spectators planning to be in their seats by one o'clock in the afternoon are urged to do so. Advance ticket sales have been good but there are still 1500 seats that be sold on Friday, the Daily Ontario Intelligencer was informed. Of these seats, 1,000 are grandstand, 4,000 in the individual reserved bleachers and 500 in the reserved of the 25-cent bleacher seats. Highest priced seats will be those at the finish line, ranging down to the 25-cent ones in the bleachers.

Facing the greatest thrill of their lives, the boys with their miniature racers have gone about their work of tuning up the small machines with a coolness that would do justice to the most iron-nerved of the dirt championship drivers, or the world's greatest auto pilots. A veteran of previous Kid Kar Derby races is Bobbie Wilson, Canadian Soap Box Derby races sponsored by the local Kinsmen Club, Bobbie Wilson, Bantleff's own representative in world championship honors, and whose picture, appearing in this ad, was reported in last minute preparations to be supremely confident and optimistic over his chances of winning the world's title in competition with expert drivers from the U.S., Honolulu and South Africa.

"When the flag is waved, I'll just be her rail. I believe mine is as fast as anyone else's there," Bobbie was reported as saying just previous to the great event.

Dominion Grader Operated

The onion grader was operated for the benefit of the Quebec Premier, who was making his first visit to Western Ontario. Mr. Hepburn said the grade was good, the best in years, and estimated his onion crop at 400 bushels per bushel.

The party spent the evening at Laurier Lodge, Mr. Hepburn's cabin beside Laurier Lake in the centre of the home farm. Mary Pickford and the Dominion Construction Company of Canada, and Bernard Baruch, well known financier of New York, were among those staying at the cabin. Among them were J. P. Bickell, early by airplane.

Premier Duplessis stayed for the night. Among them were J. P. Bickell, Toronto mining financier; Sir James Dunn, President of Algoma Steel Corporation, Limited; members of the Quebec and Ontario governments; Mr. Hepburn's mother and prominent members of the Ontario Liberal party.

The private, informal party was in contrast to the huge, public celebrations of Mr. Hepburn's birthday of the past 11 years. Congratulatory

ELDERLY LADIES ENJOY OUTING AT SUMMER CAMP

Mr. and Mrs. Sandercock, Wilfred Clare Entertain County Home Inmates

TRENT RIVER

His grain stood in the field, waiting to be cut. Stooked sheaves stood in other fields, fairly asking to be drawn to the comparative safety ok the barn. Other harvest duties called him, but a few miles away a number of aged ladies, inmates of the Hastings County Home, spending the declining days of their life in the comfort and happiness of that penitentiary institution, were waiting for him to call for them to take them where they were to have a day's outing in the clear, cool comfort of an outdoor camp.

He did hesitate. He cranked his truck in which comfortable seats had been arranged and drove away down to the road to the Home where he loaded his precious human cargo and then proceeded on to the summer camp of Mr. and Mrs. Sandercock, overlooking the Bay of the Hastings County Home on the banks of the Trent River.

And Wilfred Clare, 5th, concession of Thurlow farmer, smiled with satisfaction, and he had a right to, as he watched the elderly ladies "have their fun" and the faces in many a shadow of the camp.

Many shadows were ravaged by the markings of time, these ladies enjoyed to the utmost the fine treat which Mr. Clare, a generous and kindhearted, and a friend who gave freely of his time and energy, on the day in order that they might have a day's outing in the cool, clean corridors and environment of the institution in which they are compelled to live their lives.

They had a weiner roast. They went for a boat ride. And while there were no foot races or ball games, there were comfortable chairs, races alight with pure happiness and enjoyment, drinking in the beauty of surroundings and roundings that must have brought back memories of days long gone.

All day yesterday they relaxed under the trees, enjoying the cool summeriness of the camp. Then at night, tired but happy, appreciative and ready for bed, they wended their way home, satisfied that this day, at least, they had lived.

The outing was made possible through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Sandercock, who there in their summer camp open for the day to their elderly charges, "it was well worth the effort," Mr. Sandercock said today, "and we were rewarded with the smiles of happiness that illumined their faces after the day was over. Too much credit cannot be given Mr. Clare who gave the day and his truck in order that old people could have a day's outing."

Fails to Save Dog from Mower

Pulling his horses to a sudden halt while mowing in one of his fields on the farm of Wesley Mountain View farmer, failed to stop them in time to save the family dog, a handsome collie from receiving fatal injuries, this week.

The dog leaped in front of the mower knives, the sharp edges of which severed one of its legs.

SEES WAR PERIL AS VERY UNLIKELY

Beverley Baxter Expresses Opinion in Interview in Montreal

Montreal, Aug. 12—European dictators are gradually learning to be "good boys" and as a result there is little danger today of a European war, Beverley Baxter, Conservative member of the British House of Commons and well-known political commentator on European affairs, declared in an interview here. Accompanied by his wife, the latter M.P. is on his way to Toronto to spend a three-week vacation.

Germany's strength and unwarranted invasion of Austria" has drawn attention to direct opposition against dictators, particularly among the small nations of Europe, in the minds of Mr. Baxter, who has also served to make the Anglo-French understanding a "real natural alliance."

"Germany has lost the diplomatic battle in European affairs and Germany knows it," he added.

Both Germany and Italy were in the grip financial and economic difficulties" and the Rome-Berlin axis was none too secure. "The Rome-Berlin axis," he said, "was made in Germany, is made of substitute materials and therefore cannot last," he declared.

"Great Britain does not desire to see either Italy or Germany collapse," he continued, "but recent events have brought about greater understanding and will eventually result in a gradual liquidation of the axis powers.

Great Britain does not desire the expansion of any of the Powers, just so long as these doctrines are preached within the bor-

Says Reich Courting U. K.

If Germany ever becomes involved in a war it will be because of economic stress and will be a "war of desperation and not a war of conquest," said Mr. Baxter, who added that he believed that the German Government is willing to go to almost any limits to reach an understanding with England.

The Conservative member for North London said high tribute to Prime Minister Chamberlain who he said had been largely responsible for bringing about peace in the troubled European situation. Under Premier Chamberlain, Britain will not be drawn into any adventure, although many attempts have been made to involve her in such an expedition," said Mr. Baxter. "When Britain does go into action her movements will be crushing for the opposition."

Asked on what he based his opinion that the threat of a European war had passed for the present, the visiting M.P. said that neither England nor France desired war and that among the other nations there were no allies or friends strong enough to take a chance on a major conflict.

While on the question of war he wishes to make clear that his opinion on the British Government's plan to establish a training school for airplane pilots of the R.A.F. in Canada.

"This is a grand idea and one which should meet with the approval of everybody," he commented.

Britain's War, Our War

Asked whether the creation of such a school would mean that Canada must take part in a war in which Great Britain was involved, Mr. Baxter replied: "If England goes to war, Canada is at war."

"Technically it is the King who goes to war," he explained. "We therefore if the King goes to war, Canada is at war."

"But," he continued, "as the Prime Minister of Canada recently declared, whether or not Canada is to send men to participate in the war is a question for the government of the hour to decide.

Although he believed Canada enjoyed a unique position, with protection from Britain and the United States, Mr. Baxter said that in his opinion the country would be much better off with an increase of some 20,000,000 in population.

"Those people say that you can't make a living taking in a neighbor's washing, but make a principle has been tried and found successful," he declared, "the thing that makes sense is the needs of the people and you can't have the needs unless you have the people."

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, Aug. 13 (AP)—Senior gold and western oil stocks displayed moderate strength in the closing session of the week on the Toronto Stock Exchange while base metals leaned to the down side and the cheaper golds were barely firm. Trading was in decidedly slow tempo

McIntyre, Lake Shore, Dome and Buffalo-Ankerite lacked the gains of small fractions. Bralorne, Hard Rock, MacLeod-Cockshutt, Perron and East Malartic gained. Pickle Crow, Pamour, Chesterville, Kirkland Lake, Powell-Rouyn and Moneta eased.

Noranda, Hudson Bay, Smelters and Nickel weakened ½ to ¾. Wale Amulet closed unchanged at 6.50. Silvers, including Eldorado and Mining Corporation were firm to strong in light action.

Industrials were irregularly lower and trade was small in all groups. Walkers Common, Pord A, Brazilian and British American Oil were odd spots among the interlisted leaders.

Reports of a proration increase helped western oils.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 13 (AP)—For the sixth consecutive session stocks declined in today's market, many of the leaders drifting down fractions to a point or so. Some motors and steels did better at the close.

The apparently growing rift between Czechoslovakia and Germany, France and Italy, with the tightening of frontier restrictions and expanding military movements on the borders of these countries, served to accentuate nervousness over a possible flare-up and keep the majority of investors on political territory.

Transfers were about 400,000 shares.

Mining shares were favored in the Canadian section. Ahead 1-2 point o rless were Lake Shore, Dome and McIntyre, Porcupine, Distillers lagged a trifle, Canada 4s were neglected.

Montreal funds continued at 99.56 1-4.

Comestic stocks lacking rising stream included Goodyear, Canada Monigomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, International Harvester, Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft, American Telephone, Consolidated Edison, North American, Commercial Solvents, Scott, General Electric, Du Pont, John-Manville, Public Se. Southern Pacific and Great Northern.

Attracting some support were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, Motors, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber Common and Preferred, American Can, American Smelting, J. C. Penney, Delaware and Hudson and Standard Oil of N. J.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Bigger and Crawford By Financial Service

Following the lead of New York the Canadian markets the past two days exhibited a reactionary tendency and some fair-sized setbacks were recorded. The shake-out has been long expected and it should tend to clear the air of the uncertainty that has been existent for several weeks. It is not expected that the decline will develop a major liquidating movement, for the reason that brokerage accounts are in good shape and that a potential buying power exists from sold-out bulls and those who missed the June-July rise.

During a reactionary period in the market, those stocks that have scored the sharp gains record the greatest declines. This is the explanation that can be advanced for the weakness in National Steel Car, despite the generally accepted fact that the company for the year ended June 30th, last, earned approximately $7 a share on the outstanding stock.

A good percentage of the demand for our senior gold stocks has been emanating from American investment trusts and this explains why most of these securities are selling close to their record highs. The demand for gold in Europe on the part of hoarders, combined with rumors of a higher gold price have tended to stimulate interest in the possibilities existing in our senior gold stocks. These securities, in addition to offering a safe investment haven for surplus funds, afford an excellent yield on the money invested.

Holders of Winnipeg Electric securities will be interested to learn that sixteen new industries were established in Winnipeg during the first half of the year.

Liquor shares failed to participate in the recent market upswing in New York, quite as vigorously as some followers of the group had hoped. A new crop of corn and cutting in the East has not helped their cause either. These price wars have been developing with one great frequency to be overlooked. Both the statistical situation and merchandising policies adopted by the various companies have tended to increase the competition and squeeze the profit margin.

Produce Prices Steady at Toronto

Toronto, Aug. 13—Butter prices continued easy on the local produce market yesterday, while eggs displayed a steadier tone. No change occurred in cheese.

A report from a local source that purchases may be made in English interests if Canadian grown butter the 22-cent level provoked a bright spot to the butter market. Current quotations on the English market are 121 shillings for New Zealand finest. Meanwhile traders remain cautious and, although fresh receipts are showing the gradual seasonal decline, supplies were ample for the slow demand. Ontario first solids traded in small lots at 28 to 1-4c to 23½c for No. 1 grades, 22 ½c to 23 1-4c for 26 score, 21 3-4c to 22c for 37 score. Prints eased off in sympathy with solids, top grades selling in the range of 25c to 26½c and 36 score at 24 1-4c to 24 3-4c. Dairy state some improvement in the retail sales with present prices reaching a more attractive level to the ultimate consumer.

Advanced quotations at Montreal imparted a better feeling on the egg market. Prices were inclined to rise in the graded division with strictly fresh lots commanding ½c premium over ordinary shipments. Graded eggs sold at 26c to 26½c for grade A-large, 25c to 25½c for grade B and 23½c for No. 1 and C grades. Other sections of the market were steady at former values.

CHEESE BOARD

Of a total of 2,440 white and 343 assorted cheese offered on the Belleville Cheese Board during this morning's trading, 64 boxes sold on Charles Fralelgh at 13 2-16 cents. ## BOY LEFT BEHIND, PARENTS DEPORTED

Sad-Eyed Family Reaches Saint John, N.B., With-out Child

Boston, Aug. 13—(AP)—A nine-year-old boy was left behind when his penniless parents as a 10-year-old sister were deported to Canada.

Miss Elizabeth Golden, of the United States Immigration Office, said three members of the family, Mr. and Mrs. and Mixime Richard and a daughter, of Cardinet, Me., were Canadian-born and had entered the United States illegally. She said the family was on the relief rolls.

The boy, born in the United States, was turned over to Gardner Welfare Officials and placed in the City Infirmary after the Canadian Government, she said, refused to admit him until his father could guarantee his support.

Saint John, N.B., Aug. 13—(CP) —A sad-eyed family arrived here on the S. S. Yarmouth from Boston, Mass., Mrs. Marion Richard and their daughter, Rozelle, 6, were deported from the United States for "illegal entry" but their other child, Gerard, 11, was forced to remain in the Boston Home.

The family had been on relief. Mr. and Mrs. Richards are natives of St. Anne, Kent County, N. B. Rozelle was born in Moncton, N.B. Gerard, however, refused entry to Canada because he was born in Gardiner. Consequently he must remain separated from his family until the father can guarantee his support.

The three Richards who landed here by the Moncton-by train yesterday afternoon.

Gerard was placed in custody of Gardner Welfare Officials.

POLICE ENQUERY IS CONCLUDED

Interesting Final Scene in Investigation at Peterborough

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 13—(CP)—Magistrate Judah Saul Snider, the administration of police affairs in Peterborough was concluded Friday with an informal and private discussion of some of the points of evidence by Judge G. H. Deroche, of Belleville, presiding referee, C. G. Frost, .C., of Lindsay, who conducted the examinations, and T. J. Carley, K.C., who represented Chief Constable Ed. Small.

For the final incident the ouchell chamber was cleared of the large audience which had attended the sessions.

Most of the cartons were related to court exhibits numbers and notations that identified them but little more of a mystery.

Constable Dennis Draper of Toronto, Albert Cudby, Privy Provincial Police Commissioner, Lorne Hamilton, K. Elson Retcliffe, Aldermen A. Hall, K.C., and H. D. Kerr, K.C., It was character evidence on behalf of Chief Newhall.

Judge Deroche in winding up the hearing intimated that the report would simply be a statement of fact to the Police Commission, without recommendation.

THREE JAPANESE TRIP TO BRITAIN OFF FOR PRESENT

tols, stood in the automobile, delaying Chinese at the neighborhood lower the Chinese nationalists fled, helped in observance of the war anniversary.

Marvin reported he drew his own gun and ordered the Japanese to sit down, but that they refused, pointing their weapons at him. Then a marine sentry appeared with an automatic rifle and the Japanese turned over their guns.

The United States marines turned two of the men over to a representative of the Japanese army. The third was taken to a hospital as a result of a crack on the head when he refused to alight from the car.

Japanese authorities said the men were attached to the special service section of the Japanese army.

Disciplinary Action Demanded

Colonel Charles Price, marine commander, gave the Japanese report on the incident, requesting disciplinary action be taken and the United States marines informed of the punishment.

He said the men were charged with "threatening the peace and order of the American sector" and threatening United States marines with arms.

FRENCH-ITALIAN

French efforts to renew Italo-French relations by Premier Edouard Adolf Hitler, of Germany made a state visit to Rome early in May.

Italy Seeks Colonies

The squabble over passports, however, will not result in a serious difficulty, it has been brought officially into the open.

The incident goes back to the Ethiopian war, when France and Great Britain applied systems of National sanctions against Italy Oct. 19, 1935, and then refused to name an Ambassador to the King of Italy as Emperor of Ethiopia, thereby recognizing the Italian conquest of Ethiopia.

Authoritative circles believe Italian support for Spanish insurgents and Italian accusations of French "connivance" at the international accord for non-intervention in the Spanish civil war by letting arms for the Spanish government cross the French-Spanish frontier, have caused President Daladier's government virtually to despair of a new friendship accord with the former French ally.

TRIP TO BRITAIN OFF FOR PRESENT

Couple Injured in Accident Still in Hospital

A lifetime's dream, of the return to their native land, came to a painful and abrupt end in Belleville following a motor accident in Institution, Dr. J. A. Robertson, C. today.

"They were enroute to Montreal to call on the Empress of Britain to visit their native Scotland for the first time since leaving there over forty years ago, but their dream will not reach materialization, I am afraid,' stated Dr. Robertson, adding plans for the trip had been transformed temporarily.

Mr. Monie is suffering seriously from shock and is in a serious condition, while Mrs. Monie, who sustained a compounded fracture of the left knee, will not be able to walk for weeks, Dr. Robertson stated.

"You see, the couple are well up in years, over the 60 mark, and such injuries do not respond quite as readily to elderly persons as they would to one of younger. It is too bad, but the Monies' contemplated trip to their native Scotland will not reach the state of realization this year at least, as both Mr. and Mrs. Monie will be convalescing for some considerable period after they are released from the hospital," revealed Dr. Robertson.

FIRST SWALLOWS FLY SOUTHWARD

First vanguard of the swallows who arrive late and leave early in this district have departed for the southland, it is observed by local naturalists. Nightly flocks of the birds may be seen soaring over the district just before dusk, leaving only a few of their tribe behind to feed on the late summer insects. First hint of fall is also given by the blackbirds which are congregating in flocks in nearby marshes.

MILITARY PROMOTIONS

A great deal of interest naturally has been observed in the military changes announced this week in Ottawa, in the three branches of the service, and-especially in the air branch of defence. Col. Bishop, Canada's outstanding air fighter of the war, the outstanding airman of the Empire, who also won a place in war history as the greatest of all aviators, and who has devoted his attention to civil aviation as well as military aviation in the post war years, now becomes Air Marshal of Canada. He is one of a group of experienced men who have been chosen to act in an advisory role with the Minister of Defence on occasion and head advisory committees.

The promotion of Wing Commander A. E. Godfrey to the post of Group Captain is of interest here where he is well known as the head of the Trenton Air Base.

In these changes which include the promotion of Lt. Col. LaFleche, Deputy Minister of Defence, to the rank of Major General, there is the evidence of determination to make the military forces of Canada as effective as possible.

NEW THOUSAND ISLANDS BRIDGE OPENING

The Canadian Resources Bulletin, issued by the Department of Mines and Resources at Ottawa, refers at length to the new Thousand Islands Bridge which is to be officially opened on Aug. 18th, by President Roosevelt of the United States and Prime Minister King of Canada. Reference is also made to the international parks in the vicinity of the new link. The Bulletin says:

"A new unit will be added to the many links of communication between the United States and Canada with the formal opening of the Thousand Islands International Bridge on August 18. The governments of both the United States and Canada will be represented at the dedication ceremonies which will make the opening of an International gateway through the picturesque Thousand Islands region.

"Distant about a two-hour drive by motor car from Ottawa, Canada's capital city, the Thousand Islands International Bridge spans the Island-dotted St. Lawrence river from Ivy Lea, Ontario, to Collins Landing, New York, a distance of about eight-and-a-half miles. The new structure comprises a series of five separate bridge spans resting on five islands and linked by strips of highway. The actual link between the United States and Canada is the ninety-foot steel arch, the shortest of all international spans, over the Rift between Wellesley and Hill islands. The Rift is a narrow space of swift running water which once was run by small steamers to give excursionists a thrill.

Two islands of the St. Lawrence Islands National Park, Georgina Island and Constance Island, serve as stepping stones for the bridge as it reaches from the Canadian shore over a broad, majestic expanse of water. A new access highway leading from Brockville and Gananoque to the bridge head is under construction, and when completed will form part of the much-travelled highway from Windsor to Montreal on to Quebec City. On the United States side the bridge emerges about four miles west of Alexandria Bay, a comparatively short drive from Watertown, the focal-point for Syracuse and other large centres in the northern part of New York state.

"The new international bridge provides another avenue of approach to a popular vacation area rich in scenic attractions, for in this region the waters of the St. Lawrence are studded with more than 1,700 picturesque islands varying in size from less than an acre to several square miles. About 200 of them can be seen when crossing the bridge. As early as 1904, the Government of Canada set aside a number of these islands as national reservations which, together with a small mainland area, now form the St. Lawrence Islands National Park. On several of the park islands attractively designed pavilions and shelters have been erected, and tables, benches, outdoor stoves, sanitary conveniences and firewood are provided for the use of visitors. Each island or group of islands is in charge of a caretaker from whom the necessary camping permits may be obtained. The island parks on which improvements have been made, together with the nearest points of approach are Cedar Island, near Kingston; Georgina Island, near Ivy Lea; Aubrey and Beau Rivage Islands, near Gananoque; Davis Island, near Brockville, and Broder Island, opposite the town of Morrisburg.

LACK OF ISOLATION

The swiftly changing picture of the modern world through inventions and discoveries is nowhere more marked than it is in the place occupied by Canada in the material and international affairs of the world. Time was that Canada was isolated but for her good neighbor to the south, but isolation is nothing today, for the Atlantic is easily hopped in a day and Canada and the United States are convenient places upon which to land in the western flights across the Atlantic.

The question of defence therefore looms more larger on the horizon than ever in history. In the last war Canada was practically isolated. Today aviation has proceeded so far that isolation does not exist. The defence question is therefore the natural consideration in view of the loss of this isolation.

BREAD AND CIRCUSES

THIS HAS BEEN A HARD YEAR ON CIRCUSES, a very hard year. The Big Show, Ringling-Barnum, was forced to close through labor troubles, someone having organized the Big Top from dome to dressing room, including the elephants and camels, and even the freaks in the Side Show. Asked to take a twenty-five per cent cut on account of poor business caused by rain, unemployment, and national jitters in the United States, the circus staff, razorbacks and all, refused and the show went on—back to winter quarters in Sarasota, Florida. Cole Brothers and Clyde Beatty Circus, which visited Canada this season, reached Illinois, and closed, being now back in winter quarters in Rochester, Indiana. Charles Sparks closed his Famous Circus in Delaware, July 1, and the Sells-Sterling Circus closed three weeks ago at Sheboygan, Wisconsin. Looks like something's happened to the circus, or the people. Time was when the circus played to packed tents, sawdust and a platform and gave a hum-dinger of a performance. Then the circuses commenced to grow bigger and bigger, if not better, and most of the standard acts were duplicated or tripli-cated, until there was no room left except a circle a ten-acre field. As the circus grew bigger, expenses grew, and the fifty cent general admission, two-bits for boys, was expanded into one dollar, one dollar and one quarter, and one dollar and a half, with reserved seats 75c or one dollar, and an armored car to carry the money away in, besides peanuts, popcorn and chewing gum to buy for the kiddies and deplete the home treasury still more. Then the big circus gathered in all the medium sized ones and the circus monopoly began to function. Now, it looks like the people had turned thumbs down on the big circus which is so large that it would need a week to see and properly digest all its wonders. Too much for the average man and the pocketbook — and the union organizers who got one dollar per head initiation fee from circus workers for wrecking their season's job, are the only ones in the money.

"THIRD TERMITES" is the name bestowed upon the men and movement designed to give President Franklin Delano Roosevelt a third term in the presidential chair. There is on unwritten law that there shall be no third term for presidents of the United States and has been religiously observed for years. Colidge was stampeded up from Vice President to President, did not "choose to run", and President Roosevelt may not choose to run but there are indications of a movement which will bring pressure to bear upon him to compel him to run because as the only hope of the Democratic party and country at large, despite third term ban. As the saviour of his country Franklin Delano Roosevelt might consent to finish his work, which is nothing short of saving and furnishing the country as well. If President Roosevelt is kept in there until he pays back the money now being used for pump priming he will be in there forever.

LOOKS AS THO' JAPAN WAS DELIBERATELY PROVOKING THE RUSSIAN BEAR in order to solve the Chinese puzzle because comes more and more complicated and Japan floats ever faster toward bankruptcy and no nearer victory in China. Just a little jaunt into China, up the Yellow River, and into Pekin and Tientsin, a complimentary tour with China paying all expenses and a huge bonus such apparently was Japan's cunning anticipation of an undeclared war. It isn't working out as scheduled and Japs may find themselves so for up Salt Creek are long that they may never see the Yellow River.

Obituary

EDWARD DAWSON
Grenville, Que.

The following obituary taken from the Lachute Watchman refers to the father of Mr. Clarence, Kedneyville. The late Mr. Dawson was well known in this district during the construction of the Trent Valley Canal.

"The death of Edward Dawson, Grenville, Que., marks the passing of an old and respected resident of Argenteuil County, Born at Mille Isles, Que., in 1851, the son of William and Rachel Dawson, who with the Woods and Beatties were among the first settlers there from Northern Ireland, the deceased served in the Argenteuil Rangers during the Fenian Raids of 1871, and holds a medal marking that event.

Returning, he engaged in the construction of the Grenville Canal, becoming master for George Goodwin of Ottawa, and during the next 20 years was connected with construction of the Trent Valley Canal, the Port Arthur break-water, the Soulanges Canal and the Museum at Ottawa.

In 1875, he married Elizabeth, the daughter of the late Robert Hall of Stonefield, and Sarah Hammond, of Mille Isles, and settled on the farm in Stonefield, where the family was brought up.

He was a man of sterling character and ability and always maintained the confidence of those intimate with him. In religion, he was an Anglican and was for years a member of the Synod of Montreal, serving on its Executive Committee. In politics, he was an Independent Conservative, proud of his British Allegiance and an admirer of the late Hon. Sir George Perley.

The family include the Rev. E.E. Dawson, of Lacolle, Arthur A. of Montreal, Clarence of Kedneyville, Ont., Lemuel, Benjamin, Harris of Hroquois, late Grand Master of the Orange Lodge, Ledge of Western Ontario and C. Ray Dawson, who now operates the home farm; also two daughters, Mrs. C. P. Watson, of Oushing, and Miss Pearl, who since her mother's death, has remained his close companion.

The funeral took place from his late residence to St. Matthew's Church, Grenville, on Friday, July 29th, at 2 o'clock after which interment was made in the old Church Cemetery. A message from the Bishop was read at the service by the Rector of the parish.

The sons, Clarence, of Kedneyville, Ont., was prevented by illness from attendance, also Lemus, of Brandon, Man., who visited his father a few weeks before his death, was unable to return.

At the morning service on Sunday, July 31st, in St. Matthew's Church, special reference was made to the late Mr. Dawson's long service and the sterling Christian character of the deceased, his many acts of benevolence and of his contribution some years ago, of $1,000.00 to the endowments of St. Matthew's Church."

President of United States And Prime Minister of Canada To Open 1000 Island Bridge

Will Mark More Than Century of Peace And Goodwill of Two Nations

FESTAL OCCASION

Alexandria Bay, Aug. 13—The century of peace and goodwill which has existed along the Canadian border will be officially marked on August 18th, when the Presidents of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Premier of Canada, Mackenzie King, will join in officially dedicating another testimonial to the friendly relations between the two countries—the new Thousand Island Bridge.

On the morning of August 18th, the President will receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Queen's University at Kingston, Ont., thirty miles down here. Shortly after the Kingston ceremony, the president will motor to the Canadian end of the new bridge at Ivy Lea, Ontario, and after crossing the three Canadian spans he will return across the rift.

21 Gun Salute

As the President of the United States and the Premier of Canada cross the rift, bridge they will be given a twenty-one gun salute by a battery of artillery from Madison Barracks. Then the presidential party will motor to the site of the bridge dedication nearby on Wellesley Island.

The State of New York will be represented at the bridge dedication by the Governor of the State, Herbert H. Lehman, and the Province of Ontario will be represented by the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, Albert Matthews.

The second day of the three-day bridge dedication festivities will be featured by a musical concert, headed by an afternoon's program of band concerts given by the Rochester Park Band and by an automobile tribal ceremony with dances in full Indian costume.

Trees to be Planted

On Saturday morning, August 20, young people from the Thousand Islands will plant white birch trees on the Canadian side of the International Rift and a group of Canadian young men will plant maple trees on the American side of the International Rift.

Saturday afternoon will be featured by the largest naval parade ever held in the 1000 Island section of the St. Lawrence. Most of the fifteen hundred motor boats and cruisers moored in the Thousand Islands area will be in the line of march and they will be joined by motor boats, cruisers and yachts from most of the ports along the St. Lawrence River, the Great Lakes and the New York area.

Rear Admiral Lackey, the commanding officer of the New York Naval Reserves will review the big parade from the upper deck of the U.S.C., 431, the submarine stationed in the Watertown Naval Reserve Unit.

Fireworks from Fort

The three-day celebration will be brought to a close here on Saturday evening, August 20th, with a display of fireworks lasting two hours. The fireworks will be touched off from the grounds of historic Fort Wellington and there will give visiting tourists and summer residents miles around a chance to see the monster pyrotechnic display.

It was just a hundred years ago this summer when the whole Canadian border was in a turmoil over the raids and the plans for future raids of the so-called "Patriots" recruited from both sides of the border with the object of "freeing" Canada from British rule.

One of the most spectacular events of this abortive affair was the sinking of the Sir Robert Peel, a British naval vessel loaded with a hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars in gold and se...lts way to Toronto where the gold was to be used to pay off British troops stationed at Fort York.

Story of Incident

The Sir Robert Peel was tied up at a wharf for an overnight stay near the present site of the 1000 Island bridge when a band of "Patriots" under the leadership of "Bill" Johnston, self styled admiral of the 1000 Islands boarded the vessel. After driving off crew and passengers Johnston's crew took what gold and cargo they could readily move and scuttled the ship.

The whole border was in an uproar over the affair, but because of the many sympathizers with Johnston and his crew in the United States, the Federal Government did not take very strong measures to capture Johnston.

Relations between the two countries were stimulated for a number of years over the "Pirates" uprising. Significantly, the hull of the famous old vessel which caused the trouble a hundred years ago can now be seen from the towers of the new bridge, which appropriately marks the present era of good feelings between the two neighboring countries.

In honor of the visit of the King and Queen of England to Paris, entrance is lacing placed on which are shown the English Houses of Parliament and the French Arc de Triomphe.

A member of a new group of firemen attorneys for whom Mayor La Guardia, of New York plans careers in city service. # Two More Lookout Towers Under Construction in Hastings

Five Already Guard Forests of Hastings And Peterborough

Five lofty spires towering into the air and manned by vigilant fire rangers who are forever scanning the dark-green horizon from dawn until dusk, guard the forest areas of the northland. Five of these erected in Hastings County and the adjoining county of Peterborough, are managed under a system of guarding, locating and fighting forest fire which is admitidely one of the finest in the world.

Throughout the summer the rangers in their daily work exemplify the tried motto, "Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Safety."

To aid in the system of fire lookouts which are sprinkled through the most dangerous districts of the northland, two more towers are under construction, both in Hastings County. One is on Mt. Eagle's Nest near Bancroft, the second near Cloyne on the Mt. Donald's station. In Cashel, one tower which was badly damaged by lightning this summer is being repaired.

Method of Spotting

The system of locating a fire once it has been detected through the first streamers of smoke, is simple and effective to the last degree of seconds. On the wall of each headquarters is a map of the ranger's district, county on which is marked in bright ink the location of each lookout tower. A circle marked in degrees covers each tower location, and hung by a small wright in the centre of the circle is a thumb back on a string.

When one ranger 'phones that smoke is visible from his tower, he gives the degree from the circle in degrees from his position. At his lower a large circle on a map, also marked in degrees and always in a fixed position, is used by the ranger, together with a powerful telescope. The despatcher then pulls the thumb back on the centre of the tower reporting, and plugs in the pin on the map next reported from the tower mark, but along the degree line as reported by the ranger, the string serving as the guide.

Cause of Fires

The despatcher then 'phones two or three other lookouts, and if they are able to see the smoke, they get degree reading from each. If they are all looking at the same fire, all the strings will cross at exactly the same spot. That is the location of the fire. The nearest ranger is then ordered to keep a close watch, and if the smoke increases, a crew is despatched to investigate and extinguish it.

Smokers are responsible for the majority of the fires in the sometimes under-like sections of the north country. Campers run a close second. It is reported by the department of lighting operations, prospectors, some times just plain incendiarism and other unknown causes are listed in order. Much of the equipment used by the rangers for the entire northern section, Chief Ranger is Milton Blough of Bancroft, with Ranger Mahaffy of Apsley is deputy chief.

It is an onerous but pleasant job and one which few could be told of stirring events of the north country for they are constantly on the constant guard against the fire demon. Their eyes are completely out of control once he is given sufficient start in the dry timber. Very few escape their notice, except for their quick reaction in emergencies. their keen eyesight and handy proximity the fire rangers in their lonely outposts, are the first line of defence, dwindling forest resources in a manner it to be included among the world's best.

MINING ENGINEER LOSES HIS LIFE

H. S. Denny Crashes Into Tree in Swerve to Avoid Child

Toronto, August 13—(CP)—Henry Samuel Denny, C.B.E., was killed yesterday when his car crashed into a tree as police believe he swerved to avoid a child playing in the road. Mr. Denny was thrown clear of the wreck but a piece of the broken steering wheel pierced his neck.

Mr. Denny, president of Sudbury Contact Mines, Ltd., and of Menior Exploration and Development Co., Ltd. was director and consulting engineer of other Canadian Mining Companies.

Born at Bathurst, Australia, March 13, 1872, he was associated with Sheelick and Denny, London, England, as metallurgist in 1890. The following year he became assistant manager of Tekero Gold Mines, Austria-Hungary.

Between 1892 and 1896, he was associated with South African Mining. In 1907, he became interested in mining in Mexico, and later in the United States and Europe. In 1918, he was appointed superintendent of high explosives factories in Great Britain and with 1918, was made technical adviser to General Plumer.

Coming to Canada first in 1920, on professional work, Mr. Denny took up temporary residence in 1927. He was the author of works on metallurgy in England, the United States and South Africa. He is survived by his widow, Edith Mary Denny, one son and two daughters.

MONKEYS ESCAPE

Montreal, Aug. 13—(CP)—Six Rhesus monkeys swung from the trees in Lafontaine Park in suburban Cartierville early yesterday and stopped and with their tweak their saucy noses at police and Park Officials who tried to coax them back to the cage they slipped out of Thursday with three more of their brethren.

The nine monks scampered through a weak spot in the wire of the cage where 36 are confined and made their antics a little funnier by swinging by their tails and above the hundreds of spectators who journeyed to the Park for the afternoon.

LONE SENATOR WINS

"Lucky? You bet!" says Hattie W. Caraway, only woman member of the United States senate, as she flashes a winner's smile on her way to receive a portrait from Democratic senatorial primary in Jonesboro, Arkansas, in which she was renominated by a wide margin. The U. S. Senate apparently returns its lone feminine member.

Modern Cleaners' Picnic at Cedardale

AUGUST 7

It was the day before the picnic
The girls felt pretty sick
For dark clouds were in the sky
Hadn't they reason to sigh?

Then tomorrow it appears,
Bright and sunny as a New Year,
Everyone's happy, cheerful and glad
Who has reason to be mad?

The people gather, the while trucks too.
One from Kingston, Belleville three,
The Modern Cleaners on a spree.

Up the highway they are seen,
Belleville, one, two, three,
Kingston fourth, and then the car
Carrying the bona's family four.

Then 'tis Lakeshore here we are,
After travelling so far,
They all get out and into their suits
To enjoy a swim before their fruit.

The dinner is grand, the punch is too,
The sun is hot in that sky so blue
Red are the backs of this happy crew
But they don't seem to give a hang.

Then the boys play catch
While the girls do dishes,
A game of ball after
With the girls the victors.

They soon get tired and lay down
Then in for a swim it is the best.
"Who let me with that water ball?"
You often hear one of the maids call.

"When do we eat?" some of the lads say,
Then you realize you are hungry that day
So to the table they all go,
No one seems to be very slow.

They are all lazy after eating so
And lay down again to tell tales and such,
But the children seem tired, and need their rest,
They had better go home, that is best.

"For he is a jolly good fellow"
Sings the voices of the gang,
"And she is a jolly good woman"
The boss and his wife so grand.

Then for wood to build a fire true
To roast marshmallows for more than two,
The moon climbs high, the gang goes back
With talk of a wiener roast to be held at the Outlet.

Many of them groan that very night
While their eyelids are anything but light,
Their backs burn, their bones ache
But they are happy when at work before eight.

Fall War Games Will Show Germany on Wartime Footing

New Type of Manoeuvres For Creating Entirely New Units of Training Reserves in Six to Ten Weeks

Berlin, Aug. 13—(AP)—Germany is on virtually a war-time footing as the time for annual autumn manoeuvres nears.

Nationwide preparations are proceeding at top speed for a type of manoeuvres to be used by Germany for the first time since the great war—creation of entirely new units for training reserves in six to 10 weeks.

Military observers were unable to estimate the number of troops involved in the fall war games because the manoeuvres are to occur sectionally, rather than in one massed display, and there is no precedent for figuring the extent.

France Is Concerned

(Alarmed by foreign reports of extensive German military preparations, French authorities ordered (CP)—Gun Laden troop trains for two days near Spruce Lake, Mile 71 on the Algoma Central Railway, was reported safe yesterday by employer Carl Adams. He had not wandered far and seemed none the worse for his experience.

Mr. and Mrs. Earle F. Gunter announce the engagement of their daughter, Vera Dorothy to Mr. John Arthur Lionel Holmes, M.A. The marriage to take place, August 19th, at their home, St. Mary's Road, St. Vital, Winnipeg. The bride-elect is a grand-daughter of Mrs. Gunter and the late Thaddeus N. Gunter of Frankford.

The Rev. Harold Reid of Oshawa, formerly of Belleville, was the town today.

Tea hostesses at the Belleville Golf Club today were Miss Jean Holland and Miss Edra McCreary.

Miss Madeleine Rose of Renfrew formerly of Belleville, has returned home after spending the past two weeks with friends in the city.

Miss Jean Hinchey, Benjamin Street, is spending her holidays in Renfrew, the guest of Miss Madeleine Rose.

Mrs. J. P. Farnsworth, Bleecker Avenue, was hostess at a delightful miscellaneous shower and bridge party last evening in honor of Miss Helen Tilley, bride-to-be.

Last evening a charmingly arranged miscellaneous shower was held at the home of Mrs. Harold L. Turner, 63 Emily Street, in honor of Miss Evelyn Adsman, bride-to-be. Emyrdyn Jones was assisted during the earlier part of the evening. The guests were then invited to the living room which was tastefully decorated with gladioli and other summer flowers. The bride was seated in the form of a treasure hunt and each gift was found in a clever way and while streamer extending from a pink and white bell in the centre of the room. Although taken by surprise, Miss Adsman thanked her friends for the gifts which were in good wishes extended to her. The hostesss Mrs. L. Turner and Mrs. R. Brownell, served a very delightful lunch which brought to a close a delightful affair.

Mr. S. C. Robsson, Athena, Ont., who has been spending the past few days in the city, having been called here owing to the illness of his brother in the Belleville General Hospital, returned home today.

AIKEN'S W. M. S.

The regular meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Aiken's United Church was held on Wednesday, August 10th, at the home of Mrs. Carman Grills, with the president, Mrs. Thos. Irwin in charge.

The theme for August being "The Church and its Work," the devotional worship service was based on "Life is what we make it." The hymn "He liveth long who liveth well" was sung, followed by prayer by Mrs. Irwin. The scripture lesson, Rev. 16 was read by Mrs. E. Hubble.

The secretary responded to the roll call with an item from the Missionary Monthly. During the business period the Treasurer announced having sent in $79.00. The corresponding secretary, Mrs. Westover, read a letter of appreciation from members of the Ladies' Aid Society for the enjoyable time spent at "At Home" at Aikens. Letters were also read from Mrs. Ernest Ray and Mrs. Albert Page and family, acknowledging cards of sympathy sent them during bereavement.

Plans were made concerning quilts for supply work and there was a discussion on "Duties of Local Leaders". "Our responsibility in Social Welfare" was taken by the convincing manner by Mrs. Charlie Fair and Mrs. Stanley Stafford. "Take My Life and Let It Be" was then sung, and a violin solo by Master Carman Grills of Belleville was much enjoyed by all present.

Mrs. Harold Hamilton, Missionary Monthly secretary, then presented a short play which vividly described the phases of the W. M. S. work, as given each month in the Missionary Monthly. One needs but read the pages of this splendid magazine to keep in touch with the Temperance Question, Social Welfare, Hospital and Supply Work in the northern areas, as well as the Mission Band Circle and Auxiliary Work as given by the secretaries of the various departments. Also the messages from the president and members of the Dominion Board, and the editorials and articles that make this magazine so well worth reading, and quoting.

Mrs. Hamilton was assisted by Dorothy Ray, Ruth Spafford, Edith Hogle and Mrs. Percy Hamilton in the presentation of this impressive play, which showed the responsibility of missionary work centering in the reading of their magazine, "The Missionary Monthly".

"A Day's Work with a Mission-ary" was then given by Mrs. Westover, and Mrs. Lee Grills read "God Made a Garden."

A Temperance reading "What Three Dollars Will Do" was given by Miss Jennie Hearns, following "A Charge to Keep I Have" was sung and the meeting closed with prayer by Mrs. Irwin.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

What Impression Do You Make on People You Meet?

"Nancy always knows exactly what to do and what to say. I wish that I could meet people the way she does".

"Tom is so popular with everybody. I wish I could be!"

Popularity. Charm of manner. Grace in meeting people. Glamour words these full of appeal.

Did I hear you say that these qualities, so eagerly desired by every one of us, are the "gifts of the gods"? Immediately I'll grant that in a few fortunate cases they are. But happily most happily for the real truth is that popularity, charm of manner, graciousness, may be acquired by a clear-eyed vision, keen will-power, high-hearted persistence.

Your personality . . . the sum of all the qualities that make you either likable or disliked by others . . . is never more revealed than when you are on your vacation. Conventions have been behind you your usual fortifications: your home-background your family, your dear friends. Your are in new surroundings, meeting new people having new experiences. What impressions will you make?

Give yourself a Social Intelligence Test. Do you when you are introduced to people say a brusque and incorrect "How do you do"? Or when you should be saying a gracious and correct "How do you do". Do you grumpily hug tightly to you that of delicate essence "If are you conscious" instead of gallantly going forth to meet the spirit of the other person trying to find out and participate in his or her interests and enthusiasms? Have you carefully checked up on your good points, so as to make the most of them? Have you learned to "be yourself"?

Do you really try to please others, or have you never outgrown the "spoiled child" plan-of-life? Is it your inclination to say kind things, appreciative things, graceful things, or to your tongue an "unruly member", saying tactless, barbed things, eager to pass on malicious gossip, unkind, from him and a thoughtful?

Do you charmingly "lean out your ear and listen," or do you "know all the answers", being interested only on your own opinions? Are you tolerant (and what an important word this is!) to everyone you meet, or do you turn on your charm only for members of the opposite sex? In the things you do and say on your manner and manners in line with that shines through your eyes, you are a generous-thoughted person?

Hotel Register

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1—Please tell me the proper way to sign a hotel register? I am a young unmarried woman.

2—When accompanied by my sister should I sign for her also?

1—You should sign the register just like this:

Miss Mary Webster, 123 Home Street Jamaica, New York

(If the hotel register is a book, there usually is not a space for the street address. But nowadays the usual form of registry is the framed card and on the card is a space for the street address as well as for the city and state. This is very convenient for those who file and for the forwarding of any letters that may arrive for you after you have left the hotel.)

2—Just as you like . . . either you or your sister may write her name and address. If your sister is married this is the correct form to use in addressing her.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Girl's Home Life a "Nightmare"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Since I have been brought up in surroundings not fit for a child, and alone in many unfair situations have been heaped upon me, mainly by my mother, I am in a very sad state of mind.

My mother seems to hate her daughters and is very hard to suit and accuses us of impossible things. Now I have a chance to marry and get away from this dreadful nightmare of a home. The man and I are of different religions and would that make any difference? At least I know that my life would be happier with him than it is here in a home of hate envy and accusation. Shall I marry this man?

The Last Daughter

After the horrors related in your letter which are unprintable I hope you won't hesitate over such a thing as a difference in religious affiliations. Don't lose a moment. Put on your hat and go to your clergyman and tell him that there is an escape that seems miraculous to me.

Hopes Errant Son May See This

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Looking back on the mistakes I have made I know now that I should have taken an interest in something besides my home and my only child. She was a baby of three when his father died. And I had to work hard every day to keep our little home together.

He was devoted to me till he was 16 years of age, and then I guess like his associates. I tried to reason with him, but unfortunately my patience especially when he'd come home with the odor of liquor on his breath. But now he is always welcome him no matter how he comes home or when. He has been gone three months, and I've never heard a word.

Can't you my job and I have gone everywhere that I thought a trace of him could be found, but with no success Have you any suggestions?

Distraught

Why not get in touch with the police?

At the same time I would try to make friendly contacts with some of your friends in the city and see if they haven't some light to throw on his absence. Don't give up hope. Keep on trying. And if they don't get into mischief they are more than likely to come back to the old home when the going looms as a Paradise through hunger and hardships. And here's hoping he may see your letter.

Moderate Sunshine Beneficial

The makers of hats for men, whose business has suffered severely since the bare-head mania has prevailed, have reason for new hope. It has been discovered, according to some authorities on diseases of the scalp, that going hatless in summer, instead of promoting the health and growth of the hair, is a potent factor in producing baldness.

As a recent conference of specialists in scalp treatment, at Chicago, it was asserted that the hatless fad, instead of promoting luxuriant growth of the hair, as it was widely believed it would, had resulted in an increase of baldness and many scalp ailments caused by over-doses of destructive sun rays.

There are two kinds of rays from the sun to which the human body should not be exposed too liberally in summer. These are the ultra-violet and the infra-red. Both have powerful properties during direct sunlight and can readily do damage to the tissues of the human body. In moderate doses these rays can be beneficial, but they can be dangerous when the exposure is unrestricted.

During the last ten or fifteen years, there has grown up a popular vogue for going bareheaded. It is asserted the hat trade seriously, just as the stockingless fashion among women was a severe blow to the silk industry. Now it has been revealed that going without a hat in direct sunlight will not promote an extra growth of the hair and might easily do damage to it by fading and by producing brittleness; there is likely to be a change of opinion among the hatless fashion.

In general there is now a good moderate bubble with regard to sunbathing. It is no longer as popular as it was, to invite a deep coat of tan all over the body by remaining exposed in direct summer sunlight. There is a trend to more moderate methods in this. The decision is that it is helpful to a fair degree of tan but there ought not to be unrestricted exposure of the body after day. People are discovering more and more by experience that moderation in everything, food, drink, exercise, exposure to the sun or to other severe climatic manifestations, is a great help toward a normal existence.

The Little Red Schoolhouse

At Solina last week-end a surprisingly large number of former residents of that prosperous and well behaved village, families and graduates of its "little red school house" returned to the old scenes of their boyhood and girlhood to renew acquaintances and revive friendships at a reunion. It was an extremely happy affair, well attended, well arranged, and well carried out.

There was one thing, however, that was particularly noticeable at all of the old timers and prominent citizens made their reminiscent addresses, and it was noticeable to us that in every instance these addresses referred with grateful appreciation to the important part that the school teacher had played in their l...es. It was a tribute well deserved, and it was a splendid gesture on the part of the speakers to publicly remind the gathering of the important part that the school teacher' plays in the development of the young life of a community.

Solina has turned out many prominent citizens. We would say that on the ratio of population, places of Solina's size turn out a larger percentage of successful people than do towns and cities. There are three influences that may lay claim to the credit they are, the home, the school and the church. The reason we particularly mention the school is because during the formative stages of life the teacher has charge of the children for many hours each day. Too often unfortunately, in these days the teacher is not well paid, and yet despite this handicap the teacher carries on moulding the lives of young people into worthwhile citizens.

What is true of Solina is true of other rural centres. The teacher has the care of the children, but very often is actively connected with the church, young people's society and with other worthwhile community organizations. In most instances too, the teacher will be found to be the leading light in these groups, unostentatiously carrying the load and letting others take the credit.—Bowmanville Statesman.

Noyes' Biography of Voltaire Causes Controversy in Press

English Poet Who Turned to Catholicism Ten Years Ago Explains His Purpose in Writing Work Which Has Been Condemned by Vatican Congregation.

London, Aug. 13.—(CP-Havas)—Arthur Cardinal Hinsley, Archbishop of Westminster, expressed regret, in a letter to the Times, over the amount of premature publicity given to condemnation by the Vatican's congregation of the Holy Office of Alfred Noyes' Biography of Voltaire.

The affair has given rise to an open controversy in the press, begun by Lord Charnwood, a close friend of Noyes, in a letter and in which he accuses the publishers of the Times and continued in other English newspapers.

Noyes, well-known English author, was converted to Roman Catholicism ten years ago. The biography of Voltaire, famous 18th century agnostic and philosopher, was written two years ago. Last May it was condemned by the congregation of the Holy Office, but not formally.

Noyes Defends Book

Through Cardinal Hinsley, Noyes was advised that the condemnation of his book might be made formal unless he withdrew all copies from circulation and wrote a statement that will be equivalent to reparation.

The congregation of the Holy Office also asked that the publishers of Catholic books severely warned" and requested to do his share in withdrawing the book from circulation.

Noyes defended his work in a declaration submitted to the Holy See, reasserting his complete adherence to the Catholic faith.

He attempted in his aim in writing the biography had been to place himself on the same ground as unbelievers like Charles Darwin and Voltaire expressed opinions and beliefs which refute the arguments of atheists.

Claims Conversions Already

"The book attempts to show," he said, "that where Voltaire failed in his work Locke departed from the philosophical tenets of Christianity and led to the failure of his own insight."

Noyes asserted that a work of that kind should be above all accusations of propaganda and that he hoped that to achieve his end the author must be silent in the matter of conversions, the place of unbelieving readers.

Noyes added that his book had already furthered several conversions and had been widely quoted by Catholic writers in England.

In a letter to Cardinal Hinsley Noyes protested vigorously against the request that he wrote something in reparation, declaring that he was the first time a writer of some prominence had submitted his own work to the censorship of the Vatican today.

Cardinal Hinsley stressed that the condemnation had been severely criticized and that the Pope had not yet pronounced upon it.

Praise Child Always For His Fine Traits

Children Strive to Develop Qualities That Parents Laud in Them

(By LISA GRENELLE)

ROBERT'S FATHER told him one day that he mustn't take his Aunt Lucy on any more long bicycle rides.

"It's too much for her Robert," he said. "The doctor says it's too much for her at her age. She'll break down. And then no more summers for you in the country, eh! Don't forget that Robert. Tire your self out, and you'll have to stay in town all summer."

A few days later Robert found his mother say to Sister Ruth: "If you take all Cousin Sylvia's toys away from her, Ruth, Sylvia's mother won't ask you to play in their yard any more. And poor father and I haven't the money or the space to provide you with a outdoor sand swing."

Both statements are plain practical arguments that any intelligent child should understand but not the sort of reasoning, not the sort of clear presentation that would be likely to promote generosity, unselfishness or gratitude in either child however.

Parents to Blame

Both Robert and Ruth before appealed only to the selfishness and fear in Robert and Ruth. Robert was to consider Aunt Lucy only because in the end it would be to his advantage to do so. In like manner, Ruth was to refrain from taking Cousin Alice's toys not because it was wrong greedy and unfair, but because if she didn't, in the long run it would be to Ruth's own disadvantage.

We're all tired of hearing about character-building. I know I am. However it's a bit of prime importance. And character though no doubt strengthened or weakened by inheritance, is at best a sensitive plant needing much attention, loving care and encouragement in the right sort of stimul.

Some parents and many spinsters and bachelors say: "What is the use in appealing to anything but selfishness in children! All children are entirely selfish."

In the absolute sense of the word that is quite true, no doubt; otherwise they're only as selfish as we expect and teach them to be.

Encourage Fine Traits

In talking to Robert of Aunt Lucy's lack of endurance Father should have assumed, whether or not it were so, that Cousin Robert would wish to consider his aunt. "Of course I know, Robert, that as soon as you understand you would not allow your aunt to do too far and that bravery." Appeal to his sense of importance, his protective instinct.) "I trust you more than your aunt. Because I know in order not to spoil your pleasure Aunt Lucy might not admit how tired he was. You, however, are old enough to take care of her and you will do so in time."

In the same way Mother should have showed her disappointment in Ruth for taking Cousin Alice's toys. "I never would have believed it of you Ruth. You who have always been generous (even if Ruth is no such thing).

AT THE BELLE

Shirley Temple always turns in a fine performance and millions of fans will attest —but this time she gives you the time of your life!

She's Shirley of surprises simply bubbling over with mischief and romancing, fun making show people. And if you're thrillable, "Little Miss Broadway", at the Belle Theatre is the greatest thing in the world.

The grand group of troupers which aids and abets Miss Temple is headed by that scintillating stepper, George Murphy; the irrepressible Phil Silvers, comedian; the blonde Phyllis Brooks and Edna Mae Oliver, the popular, prim and proudish grande dame of filmdom.

To make this the happy musical thrill hit of the year six, new Bull-lock and Spina melodies radiate from the magic wand of which collectors can choose from "Be Optimistic", "We Should Be Together", "I'll Always Be In Love With You", "Swing Me an Old-Fashioned Song", "Make Believe" and the title, "Little Miss Broadway", the title song.

It's all about a little miss who lives in a vaudeville home with her foster family Ed. Ellis and Phyllis Brooks, comedy dancing team and Jazz band gets too loud in its rehearsals, the wealthy neighbor, Edna Mae Oliver complains and threatens to close the hotel. George Murphy, a theatrical booking agent and while he wins nothing but enmity from his prim aunt, at least he has the favor of Miss Temple.

Led by the astonishing, amazing and brilliant Shirley, everything else is all-wonderful from start to finish. Shirley convinces an austere judge that he should permit the actors to keep their cottage in the courtroom; George Barbier, Edward Ellis, Jane Darwell, El Brendel, Donald Meek, Patricia (Honey Chile) Wilder and Claude Gillingwater, Sr., have an amazing group of character players under the personal supervision of Irving Cummings with David Hempstead as associate producer. The screen play was created by Harry Tugent and Jack Yellen.

Special Short Subjects

A fine group of surrounding short subjects includes a Paramount cartoon entitled "A Star is Hatched". A two reel comedy entitled "Money on Your Face" featuring Charles Kemper and Danny Kaye, "Ballet of the Month" and the Belle News. Latest World News Events build up to one of the finest programs presented on our screen this season.

London, Aug. 13 (CP-Havas)—Marianne and France, two dolls presented to Princesses Elisabeth and Margaret Rose by the people of France, arrived in London today to await the return of the Princesses from Balmoral Castle, Scotland. Wardrobes filling 20 boxes accompanied the dolls.

Four year old Janet Chapman starred in "Little Miss Thoroughbred" coming to the McCarthy Theatre.

We're all tired of hearing about character-building. I know I am. However it's a bit of prime importance. And character though no doubt strengthened or weakened by inheritance, is at best a sensitive plant needing much attention, loving care and encouragement in the right sort of stimul.

Some parents and many spinsters and bachelors say: "What is the use in appealing to anything but selfishness in children! All children are entirely selfish."

In the absolute sense of the word that is quite true, no doubt; otherwise they're only as selfish as we expect and teach them to be.

Encourage Fine Traits

In talking to Robert of Aunt Lucy's lack of endurance Father should have assumed, whether or not it were so, that Cousin Robert would wish to consider his aunt. "Of course I know, Robert, that as soon as you understand you would not allow your aunt to do too far and that bravery." Appeal to his sense of importance, his protective instinct.) "I trust you more than your aunt. Because I know in order not to spoil your pleasure Aunt Lucy might not admit how tired he was. You, however, are old enough to take care of her and you will do so in time."

In the same way Mother should have showed her disappointment in Ruth for taking Cousin Alice's toys. "I never would have believed it of you Ruth. You who have always been generous (even if Ruth is no such thing).

If a child feels his parent does not believe him to be generous, unselfish, unselfish, he will never be generous, unselfish, unselfish.

"Little Miss Thoroughbred"

When "Little Miss Thoroughbred" at the McCarthy Theatre starting that tells how big race track betting coups are sometimes engineered, is the premiere at the McCarthy theatre the public will be introduced to a darling child star who is equally as expertly accepted by the studio to become the next great child star of the little girl, Janet Chapman by name, plays the title role in the picture, and a measure of the studio's belief in her future that she was given this important part even though she had only one day's professional acting experience before.

In fact, when the picture was started, her part was not as big as it was made during the course of production, for the studio had planned the picture mainly as a vehicle for the team which scored so great a hit in "Alcatraz Island", Ann Sheridan and John Litel, with only a few comedy part for Litel relief laugh-getter, Frank McHugh.

As the story unfolds, however, Janet, a little orphan who is charmingly convinced that she has a daddy somewhere.

Running away from the orphanage to find her dream daddy, the child comes by freakish chance, into the custody of Litel and Sheridan and Frank McHugh, a pair whose chief vocation is following the horses from track to track and trying to make a living by betting on them.

Janet thinks Litel is her daddy, and at first reluctant to accept this sudden fatherhood, he eventually takes to the child and is soon convinced the child is responsible for his getting himself in one jam after another.

The other adults who take important parts in the proceedings include Eric Stanley, Robert Homas, Charles Wilson, John Ridgely and Jean Benedict.

Born Blind

By MYRA A. WINGATE

"I don't know," said the girl slowly. "Of course the cost of everything has increased since we agreed to teach at this salary, and it is difficult to make ends meet. Still, I don't think that as well as the individual is have pressed, and I will not ask for more this year. The committee did not require us to sign a contract at the beginning of the year, but I am willing if the others are. Why didn't Mr. Haight come himself?"

"The others have signed theirs," said Stetson, the high school principal, smoothly. "Miss Wyatt, it was not convenient for Mr. Haight to come, and he asked me to do it for him."

"One must make sacrifices, dear," said Miss Stetson, affectionately, signing her name. "Though I sometimes feel that we can do it another year. Mrs. Ryker, our boarding mistress, would like a higher salary until we received higher pay, yet we know she was not making enough to live on in the city. We made her take more, but it's crippling to our finances."

Stetson pocketed the papers.

"Oh, I got my raise," he declared gayly, "and I'm satisfied. Miss Wyatt, you're not going to quit, are you? I'm sure you agreed to help him bind the year of us without telling the secret."

Stetson shot a look of white scorn in Molly Wyatt's face.

"Nonsense," he declared. "Miss Wyatt?" he stammered.

"You really don't mean it?" she asked curiously. "You ask the impossible, Mr. Stetson. I cannot open the eyes of one born blind."

The years of the war started Stetson's success.

On his thirty-fifth birthday, newly made president of the bank, he announced he had hoped to have at that age, engaged Molly; but as yet she had not seemed kinder.

It was, he thought, a happy omen that he should see her walking toward him as he came down the street. Molly was going to join her.

"Whence and whither, Miss Molly?" he asked, swinging along beside her.

"Talking with Bridget Molloy, and home," she answered soberly.

"Ah, yes," Stetson recalled. Molloy had paid regularly the interest on his daughter's mortgage, which the bank had renewed year after year. This year, Ill and unemployed, he could not pay and consequently had been told that unless the interest was paid when due, foreclosure proceedings would begin.

"Couldn't you do something about it?" asked Molly, confident Stetson could do anything.

He shook his head slowly.

"Bridget is not a good interests," Bridget is old. It is unlikely that she will ever be able to pay. The property is worth no more than it does, it deteriorates."

"Deteriorates, indeed!" explained Molly, carefully, fearful of making a pronunciation that would hurt his friendship. "There would not have been a mortgage but for her husband's illness. He worked hard and I and others have done without that he might be confident! Couldn't all her friends join forces and help her? She has given them her little strip of land may one day have a greater value Then she could pay, and have some left for herself."

Stetson glanced at her shrewdly. There was a chance that one of the ardent indignities started each week old Bridget's land might succeed and, wishing to expand, pay Stetson handsomely for the property. That, however, was in the future. "I'll see," he said, "because it was good business," he answered truthfully. "But not for sentimental considerations. Will you be my guest to get ahead."

Bridget was ever do anything just because it's honorable or kind or liberal" she replied, coldly.

"Molly! Molly! I'll do it for you. I love you and want you to marry me." The words died on his expression. His heart shone in his eyes.

They had paused at her door-step and she stood looking at him sadly.

"For me, if I'll marry you, but not for Bridget, who gave us both what she could and pay for. Oh, I could have loved you—I could have! I've wouldn't matter much about physical blindness, but this is spiritual. The answer is—No."

Though he felt numbed as from a blow, the man's muscles obeyed his will and he walked away.

Bridget Molloy met her obligation on the appointed date. Stetson, familiar with all the business of the small bank, knew that Molly's wish was fulfilled. Bridget was by a thousand dollars. He tried to believe that it had been done with a hope c. future profit. Inwardly, however, because he could not understand.

Why Moan If Others Carry On?

"The world is so full of a number of things,
I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings!"

By VIRGINIA LEE

THE MAN who wrote that couplet had tuberculosis, was hardly free from suffering and died young. But Robert Louis Stevenson always will be a loved figure for his grand yarns which everyone likes to read.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, grand old woman of the temperance world, is 80, but says she doesn't know what it means to be old, because "an active mind and body never grow old."

A young country doctor I know, Dr. Jack DeTar, is a very able physician. He might moan that circumstances keep him in a small town when he might shine among his confemporaries in a large city. But does he? Not at all. He has a large medical practice, and besides he works with young boys, organizing them into groups, helping them plan wholesome activities. There is not a good work going on in his town, but Dr. DeTar is part and parcel of it, and usually the organizer. Now he is campaigning to get an up-to-date hospital for his town. He'll get it, too. I'll bet on him.

Then why do we sit and moan over our woes? Whether we be 16, 60 or 80? There always a way out if we keep up our courage and try hard enough to find it. Keep up the good fight, comrades. Let your heads be "bloody (if they must) but unbowed."

CHERRY AND TOT have been going together for two years and get along fine. Tod is going to junior college, has two more years to go. Then if he goes to college from there it will mean three more years before they can marry.

This is their plan: When Tod graduates from junior college he will try to get a job, and if he succeeds they will be married. That is, if he earns what they consider the minimum on which they can be married. If he doesn't he will go to college and they will wait until he graduates before wedding.

There is only one fault I have to find with your plan, dears, and that is their one thought. Will Tod ever regret that he didn't finish college? Will it handicap him in his career, whatever it may be? However, go ahead with your plan. You may see fit to change it as time goes on, and as you both are so young, but good luck, anyway.

This is How You Can Alter Dress To Make It New

Double Net Fichu Will Help Evening Gown, Little Jackets, Flowers and Jewelry Also Aid in Putting It Over

By LISBETH

HOW CAN you change your clothes to make them seem like new? There is always the little jacket to wear over a dress and give it a different look. Blessings on whomever invented it.

With a white dress, for instance, which you have worn several times, you can wear a navy (or any other preferred color) jerkin. One with a tallon fastener is smart, and it may be belted. If you know your jerkins you know they are generally sleeveless.

Then you can use a tiny jacket in a gay print, the bicep type.

For a strapless evening dress you can get a double net fichu, such as the one illustrated here. It is trimmed with pleated rufflings, and completely changes the appearance of the dress. Choose it in black or white. A corsage of flowers will also do much to give a new look to a dress

Jewelry Helps

Jewelry always helps to change a costume. New costume jewelry for winter will be large and massive, they say. "Tiger eye" jewelry, made of amber glass with the pupils of the eye black is very exotic. It comes in big button earrings, brooches, stiff or link bracelets, and is reminiscent of the 1900's.

Sportswear jewelry includes bamboo necklaces and bracelets. Each shoot is gold tipped. There are also Joan of Arc pieces—consisting of little chromium tubes, each tipped with a colored bead.

Maple Cream Dessert is Help to Cook Who Has No Electric Refrigerator

By MRS. MARY MORTON

Menu Hint.

Meat Loaf Baked Potatoes
Buttered Cabbage
Apple-Celery Salad
Maple Cream Dessert
Iced Coffee

The ubiquitous meat loaf goes to the dining table or to the picnic with equal eclat. So many recipes for desserts are given for the electric refrigerator, so it is a pleasure encouraging to the woman who hasn't that convenience at an up-to-the minute ice one. So this dessert will help her.

Today's Recipes.

MEAT LOAF—One and one-half pounds ground beef, one-half pound ground pork, two eggs, slightly beaten; one tablespoon grated onion, one cup tomato cracker crumbs, one cup chili sauce salt and pepper two thin slices American cheese. Have the beef and pork ground together. Add cracker crumbs and season with grated onion, salt and pepper. Moisten with eggs, shape into loaf and pour over it the chili sauce. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees) until done, about one hour. Just before taking out of the oven place strip of loaf with thin slices of cheese. When cheese is melted, remove loaf from oven and serve.

MAPLE CREAM DESSERT—One cup milk, one cup maple syrup, two eggs (beaten), two tablespoons plain gelatin, one-half cup cold water, one half pint whipping cream, one-half cup chopped dates, one-fourth cup chopped nutmeats. Soak gelatin in cold water until dissolved. Combine milk and maple syrup in top of double boiler, when hot add well beaten eggs. Stir until slightly creamy. Add gelatin mixture. Set in ice pan to cool. Whip gently with egg beater and add the nuts, dates and one-half of the cream that has been whipped. Pour mixture in two parts to one add a drop or two of red or green vegetable coloring and stir until well blended. Serve equal parts of each mixture tapped with the remaining cream, gently and a colored cherry. Serves eight.

FACTS AND FANCIES

Better Gas Ranges.

Super gas ranges are making their appearance on the market during August. These new ranges which are said to contain in one appliance the best features of all ranges are to be identified by the homemaker by the letters CP meaning Certified Performance.

Sixteen of the leading manufacturers of gas ranges to date are producing these ranges offering more than 100 CP models.

Good Combinations.

Want some juice-appetizers? Try the following juice combinations: Tomato and clam, tomato and pineapple, grapefruit and orange grapefruit and grape juice, lemon and cherry, apple and pineapple, prune and orange, raspberry and lemon, and grapefruit and cherry—with a bit of chopped mint.

Stair Rail.

All inside cellar stairs should have a hand rail on at least one side. It need not be fancy, but should be sturdy. Four-by-four or even two-by-four posts as newels securely fastened to the carriage or support of the stairs, with a stout wooden rail well nailed, will be inexpensive to install and will save many a dangerous fall.

Removes Scratches.

Says Mrs. G. G.: "I've learned how to remove fairly deep scratches from my furniture with a paste of thick mucilage mixed with coloring matter which blends with the wood. For my oak furniture I use burnt umber and raw sienna; for mahogany, Venetian red, and for my walnut pieces, burnt umber and vandyke brown. For light scratches I've found that if I mix equal portions of boiled linseed oil, turpentine, and white vinegar, and rub in the scratches well, I can cover them satisfactorily."

Hollywood Eating Sensible.

Hollywood no longer is frantically dieting, everyone in the film colony is eating sensibly, they tell us.

One of the most sensible diets in Hollywood has been adopted by Frank Fay and wife. Its dual purpose is to tone up their systems and reduce at the same time. Frank is said to have lost nine pounds by it and his wife eleven and their health is something to brag about. Here is the diet:

For breakfast: a glass of orange juice, slice of buttered toast, egg, coffee or tea. The beverage is drunk black—if some sweeting is necessary saccharine is used instead of sugar.

For lunch melba toast rye crisp, swiss cheese, cottage cheese, chipped beef or green salad or sliced chicken or meat. Luncheon beverage is skimmed milk.

If hungry at teatime the dieter is permitted melba toast and a glass of skimmed milk to take the edge off the appetite.

Dinners permit broiled or boiled meats, green salad, vegetables, cooked raw. Dessert three times a week may be either fresh or stewed fruit. The rest of the time it may be a sliced banana and skimmed milk.

There is no quantity restriction on the dieter. One does forbid liquor and requires: a quart of skimmed milk a day. Coffee or tea may be drunk in moderation if cream and sugar are not used.

Sweden has ordered a more rigorous censorship of movies because it believes many films portray too high a valuation of luxury and comfort and emphasizes the erotic side of life.

Have You the Lumbago? Doctor Tells Causes, Cure

Painful Malady Best Treated by Heat and Rest, Physician Advises

By LOGAN CLENDEING, M.D.

I HAVE been asked by a southern correspondent to discuss lumbago.

Lumbago derives its name from the lumber muscles—those massive and powerful muscles in the back on either side of the spinal column. Strictly speaking it is a pain in these muscles, but the name is applied to any pain in the back.

So in a larger sense a discussion of lumbago would be a discussion of backache. Which is too big a subject for us to take up here.

It is important, though, to know whether you have simple lumbago or backache due to other causes. There are many structures close to the lumbar muscles, and your "lumbago" may be due to arthritis of the spine or other disease of the bones thereabouts, or to kidney disease or to spinal cord disturbance. Mr. Schmeling, at the date I am writing this, undoubtedly has a "lumbago" due to having come into violent contact with a swiftly moving body.

Most cases of lumbago, however, are simple and are due to changes in the lumbar muscles themselves. We say "just a simple job" but that doesn't mean that lumbago doesn't hurt. On the contrary, it may be one of the most painful and annoying and crippling afflictions you can have. I have known cases to last for a year to 18 months.

Causes Listed

The causes are:

(1) Sprain, twisting or twisting, with the formation of little hemorrhages in the muscle, or tearing of small muscle fibers, or both.

(2) Cold—and especially a combination of cold and wet. Swimming in too cold water will do this. It is an iceman's disease, from carrying blocks of ice on the back.

(3) Infection lighting on these muscles from a faraway part of the body, as an infected or dead tooth or tonsil. This is the commonest cause.

In treatment, it is obvious from reading the list of causes that the paramount consideration is rest. Rest to allow the hemorrhages to be absorbed and rest to allow the torn muscle to heal. If injury or a sprain is the cause. Rest to allow any inflammation to subside if infection is the cause.

Rest is especially important at first. Efforts to massage or rub out the pain during the first few days may prolong recovery indefinitely and add insult to injury.

After rest, heat. Any form of external heat. This gives relief from pain and also promotes healing. One of the best forms of heat is the hot domestic flat iron. The patient is laid face down. The skin is anointed with vaseline, then a flannel is laid down over it, and an iron as hot as can be stood moved up and down over the sore area.

Later on rubbing, manipulation and massage are in order.

QUESTIONS FROM READERS

F. J.:—"Please tell in your column whether fish, ice cream soda and home-made grape wine are calcium builders."

Answer: Fish and grape wine contain little calcium; ice cream (especially if made with milk) contains some. But calcium-containing foods have not been proved to cause kidney stone formation, which it would hardly be possible, let alone desirable, to plan an entirely calcium-free diet.

Poems That Live

SONNET

Most men know love but as a part of life;
They hide it in some corner of the breast,
Even from themselves; and only when they rest
In the brief pauses of that daily strife,
Wherewith the world might else be not so rife,
They draw it forth (as one draws forth a toy
To soothe some srden, kiss-exacting boy)
Ah me! why may not love and life be one?
Why walk we thus alone, when by our side,
Love, like a visible God, might be our guide?
How would the marts grow noble!
and the street,
Worth a dungeon-floor by weary feet,
Seem then a golden court-way of the Sun!

Can You Remember The Names?

By GARRY C. MYERS, PH. D.

Head Department Parent Education, Cleveland College, Western Reserve University

THE SUCCESSFUL salesman trains himself to get the name of his prospective buyer as early and as accurately as possible. You and I have been amazed and pleased at his success. Of course his alertness and expression of personal deference to us had delighted us. We feel more companionable even toward a flower, or a bird, or a tree which we can correctly call it a violet, birch, or oriole.

Most of us suffer embarrassment racially at times because we can't recall the name of the person to whom we had been introduced a moment before. Our self-condemnation and feeling of stupidity causes us to refrain from saying what we should like to say. We then just cannot feel gracious toward him at the time; we may not toward any other person then. And the person whose name we had forgotten easily may sense our failure to remember his name, or in some way unknown to him, may feel cold toward us, or even feel repelled.

The chief psychological reason we so easily forget persons' names is our fear that we will, coupled with bad habits of attention when we are introduced. We may then be so interested in the person, so attracted or repelled by certain personal features of him, as to be distracted from the name.

A wiser person than we are makes it a practice to keep saying to himself, for instance, "Mr. Ludlow, tall and handsome—Mr. Ludlow, large glasses—Mr. Ludlow, deep bass voice—Mr. Ludlow, smiles graciously."

How Wise Person Acts

This wise person seizes the first appropriate opportunity to say something to Mr. Ludlow, ending or beginning the remark with "Mr. Ludlow." Try this scheme. It works. My own trouble is that I don't discipline myself always to so practice with the scheme.

Among other factors causing us to forget a name is the flashing to the mind of another name suggested by this person or his name. Often I become aware of this mode of blocking in myself. Others have divulged to me like experiences. To illustrate, I am sure the chairman was about to introduce me before a public audience in an eastern city, but failed to get my name until I helped her. She later told me that "Garry" kept in the way (I once ran a series of articles on "The Fifth Family" in the official P.-T. A. national journal, Child Welfare, which she had read). Graciously enough I, upon rising to speak, had a similar experience attempting for a time to refer to this person by the blocking name was not Fifth.

Let us parents help our children cultivate the habit of "remembering persons' name, particularly by making it a rule to address the other members of our family by name in conversation with them.

Questions always are welcomed, sent in care of this paper. Enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope if you wish a personal reply.

Dear Miss M. M.: The breast stroke exercise as used in swimming with firm and strengthen sagging and flabby breasts. A fine stomach flattener is the following: Lie flat on your back on the floor. Lock your thumbs together so that you cannot use your arms, then rise to a sitting position without the help of hands or feet. Do this five times the first day. Gradually increase the exercise time each day.

Dear Miss Shelby: How can I bleach the hair on my legs?—Mrs. M. Y.

Dear Miss M. Y.: Place two tablespoons of milk of magnesia (ask your druggist for magnesium carbonate—not the liquid) and mix it to add enough peroxide to make a smooth paste. Stir well. Then, in case YOU NOT MORE THAN TWO DROPS OF AMMONIA and mix thoroughly. After cleansing the skin, smooth the paste over the hairy legs. Dear Miss Shelby: As my nose is rather large, can you suggest a becoming way to arrange my hair to make it appear less prominent?—BESS.

Dear Bess: I would suggest that you have your hair curled over the forehead and dressed full in the back. Side part is usually most becoming.

Correct Weight.

Dear Miss Shelby: Please tell me the correct weight and measurements for a girl 5 feet 4 inches tall. —DOT F.

Dear Miss Shelby: Please tell me how to make the home-made reducing lotion.—MISS EVA J. M.

Dear Miss Eva J. M.: The homemade reducing lotion is made of camphor and alcohol. Shave two one-ounce cakes of camphor and add the shavings to one pint of rubbing alcohol. Allow the mixture to stand for twenty-four hours so that the camphor will melt. Use a cotton pad for rubbing the lotion and under the fatty regions twice each day. It may be used on all parts of the body except the breasts and underchin. The lotion may be used with or without reducing exercises. When the proper exercises are done at the same time, the reducing process is hastened.

LIPS TELL IF YOU'RE "HUSSY" OR A LADY

By LILLIAN CAMPBELL

LIPS, say some, are the most expressive feature of a woman's face. So one of the large cosmetic houses has made a specialty of making lips more glamourous.

First, say the experts, each woman must decide what her type is. Is she the waits or the saving sort of person? Is she young and unsophisticated — the conservative type—she should choose the lipstick that is called "Lady." Her lips tell spirit veiled loveliness and appeal rather than allure.

But if she is the swing type and likes the caviar things of life, "Hussy of a lipstick" will suit her better. When applied to the lips it makes them gleam like satin, and makes the wearer a menace to masculine piece of mind.

These lipsticks come in five different shades to harmonize with various costumes. There is verve, a true red, to wear with navy and bright blues; cerise, deep magenta, to wear with pastels; intrigue, an exotic bright raspberry, for evening wear; torch, a flaming orange red, which looks wonderful with sun-tanned skins, and Nanette, which is a bit conservative,

Cementmen Take Lead in City Series; Wes Ferrell Released by Nats

Luffman Hurls Five Hit Ball As Point Anne Drubs Corbys 12 to 2 in Replay Game

Corbys Boot Ball For Nine Glaring Errors in Defeat

GENEREAUX HOMERS

Cementmen Cinch Pastime With Seven Run Rally in Fifth

With Stan Luffman hurling five hit ball, the Point Anne "cementmen" took a firm hold on the City League softball finals as they downed the Corbys A.C. most decisively by a 12 to 2 score at Coleman Plate last evening in a replay of the previous night's seven-all draw game.

Taking full advantage of a loose Corby display, that was at times mediocre, with the boosters kicking in with nine glaring errors, the "cementmen's" bats pounded the offerings of two Corby hurlers for a total of 11 hits, breaking out with a seven run splurge in the fifth inning putting the game in the well-known container. The Corbys crowd gave their starting mound-man, Con Harris, exceptionally poor support as they repeatedly kicked the game around with continued errors of omission and commission. Dracup replaced Harris in the fifth.

Seventh Inning Rally

With the pastime delayed owing to arguments arising relative to the matter of umpires for the game, the tilt got under after a mutual agreement was arrived at. Corbys booted the pellet badly in the early frames to the tune of four runs. Ann run lead in the second, but Corbys scored a single counter to pull up in the race. The five works, balloon and the whole show went up in the fifth, however, as Green, Caulin, Whitehead and Luffman all hit soundly and Generaux climaxed the inning with a long hit to centre, bases cleared for a seven run. Three errors and two passed balls along with a couple of fielders' choices set the Point Anne clouts the piece and the decision was never in doubt from that point.

Not a single Corby batter found Luffman for more than one safety, McMartin's double being the only extra base hit collected by the boosters. Generaux with a circuit blow and single, Sero with a triple and single and Caulin with two one base knocks were the "cementmen" on the attack as every member of the squad hit a safety except Bill Murray. The fielding sensations were supplied by Murray, with a fine running catch in the sixth and Reid, with two fast pick-ups for assists. J. J. Barrage had five putouts in left field for the losers, while Generaux snagged three in centre.

The next game in the City League finals will be played at Bellville Anne on Monday.

KINGSTON 'LOCOS' HERE ON MONDAY

With "Chief" Williams Against Them, Locals Play Final Game

In order to prepare for the forthcoming intermediate O.B.A. provincial playdowns, the Bay of Quinte League has ordered a replay of all games postponed and the games in the league to be completed before Wednesday of next week. In order to comply with this order the Belleville "Orfuns" will play the Kingston "Locos" their remaining league scheduled game at the Belleville Fair Grounds on Monday afternoon. The local baseball fans must win this game in order to cinch first first place in the league standing, a point they have held throughout the season.

Since the Kingston squad invade the local ball yard for the final game before the Bay of Quinte League kick-offs, Jack "Chief" Williams will appear in Belleville in the livery of his outside team, for the first time since he made himself famous in baseball circles while pitching for the old Belleville Nationals. Many friends of Jack Williams will naturally be interested in his present-day pitching ability, something that has gone far to bring the "Locos" to their present threatening position in the Quinte loop.

| | W. | L. | T. |
| Belleville ..... | 5 | 2 | 0 |
| Napanee ..... | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Picton ..... | 5 | 6 | 1 |
| Kingston ..... | 6 | 6 | 0 |

Games next week—Monday, Kingston at Belleville, Napance at Picton; Wednesday, Kingston at Napanee.

Manager Burrell Fanning is garnering his strongest team to meet the invading Kingston team here on Monday as the local team must win this game to assure themselves of first position for the subsequent Bay of Quinte League play-offs.

CITY TENNIS TOURNAMENT NOT COMPLETED

Championships in Ladies' And Men's Doubles Awarded

Only two city tennis championships were completed in the Belleville Tennis Tournament, which played at the Quinte Skating Club courts last evening. In the men's doubles Bud O'Dell and Freddie Baines of the Bay of Quinte Club won the city honors while in the ladies' doubles, Miss Jo Crull and Miss Esther Moncrief, Belleville, won the title. The mixed doubles was not completed, only advancing to the semi-final round.

Only doubles were played during the tournament, this saw fine trophies awarded the respective winners in each class. In the mixed doubles set to be played Jo Crull and Jack Dickens defeated Dick Logie and Miss Moncrief 6-0 with the latter winners meeting Evelyn Jack and Freddie Baines of the Country Club next week in the final set.

In the first set of men's doubles Bud O'Dell and Freddie Baines, Country Club, defeated H. Schafer and Murray Clare, Belleville, 6-4, with the former pair continuing into and winning the second round over Howard Kerr and Spencer Evans, Belleville, 6-4; 6-2.

In the ladies' doubles the ultimate winners drew a bye in the first, round which saw Benalda Longley and Muriel Wardner, Point Anne, defeat Gladys Emerson and Sally Marsden 6-2. In the final, however, Jo Crull and Esther Moncrief defeated Miss Long and Miss Wardner 6-4; 6-0.

The city doubles championship results mark new interest in tennis, although play was rather slow at times, due to the inexperience of the players. Splendid silver trophies were given the two winners in each series, being awarded by the Quinte Skating Club, sponsors of the meet.

DAVIS CUP PLAY

Montreal, Aug. 13 (CP)—A fight to the finish between the British and American zone champions was forecast today as Australia and Japan renewed Davis Cup rivalry in a doubles encounter.

Pitted against Australia in yesterday's opening singles matches, the Aussies were favored to take the lead. Jack Bromwich and Adrian Quist, Australian ace team, were scheduled to meet the durable Oriental pair of Jiro Yamagishi and Ryuki Miki.

The round to decide an opponent for Germany in the Davis Cup finals and a probable challenger to the United States Cup holders will follow the doubles. Yamagishi plays Quist and Bromwich takes on Miki.

Yamagishi, a lesson in perpetual motion, defeated Bromwich, 6-0, 3-6, 7-5, 6-4 yesterday, establishing him as favorite in his match against Quist. He won the doubles in an even break by trouncing Nakano 6-0, 6-4, 6-2.

According to the draw, Yamagishi will play Quist in one of the first of the last day's singles so if form holds true and the Aussies' doubles team repeats its big heart win Japan will win tomorrow the round goes to the Orient. Then Miki or Nakano take the court for the concluding match.

MARANVILLE QUITS AS PILOT AT MONTREAL

(By The Associated Press)

Walter (Rabbit) Maranville, the little guy who has a big heart who has been trying without success to lead the Montreal baseball team somewhere this season, finally has given up the task.

Maranville, former fire some times while his club was just managing to keep out of the cellar, resigned last night, the fourth manager casualty of the season in the International league.

The Rabbit follows Tyrrell's Syracuse Chiefs and Travis Jackson of Jersey City Giants into exile.

Maranville's successor, first baseman Alex Hooks, who came to the Royals from Atlanta this season, took the job only after he was assured it was just for the rest of season and he wouldn't have the task next year.

Maranville handed in his resignation after the Royals divided a doubleheader with Jersey City, winning the first game, 2-0, when Harry Seibold outpitched Wilkins although his mates provided only three hits. The Jerseys took the second, 3-2.

The three topmost clubs in the standing were the other games on last night's card, Newark's league leaders edged Buffalo Bisons deep in the ninth inning for a 4-3 decision, beating

Rochester had to go 14 innings to beat out Baltimore Orioles, 5-4. Scharein, Philadelphia, 11.

Scharein, Philadelphia, 11.

Syracuse Chiefs to take a 7-3 decision from Toronto.

By SID FEDER

Associated Press Sports Writer

The unconditional release of Wesley (Prima Donna) Ferrell shortly will make much difference to Washington's walloping Senators. They've been getting by pretty well this season without Ferrell anyway.

Of course, you'll argue that Dutch Leonard has been doing some classy elbow work for the Nats, winning 13 games including last seven-hit 13-1 decision he took over Boston Red Sox yesterday, but those wins were members Dutch doddering along with the Dodgers a few years back recall he showed no signs then of ever becoming a ball of fire.

In brief then the Nats' waive relied just about exclusively on their apple-knocking ability to keep them in the first division. Even with that lineup like it in the big leagues today. Of the 10 regulars doing most of the work, only three are under the .300 mark, and Al Simmons, at .295, isn't so far away that a bad hit or two won't change him. At the same time, Zeke Bonura's .297 is unusually low .299 average. has driven in 84 runs in 90 games.

Mack's Maestro Role

Of course, the Nats don't figure to get any higher than their present fourth place this year. The Yankees nevertheless by virtue of having the six homers murderers' row sprayed among the paying customers yesterday in splitting a double-header with the Athletics, to remain 5 1-2 games in front. The A's took the opener 5-4, on Bob Johnson's ninth-inning round-tripper, but the Yanks came back with 16 hits in the nightcap, paced by George Selkirk's two four-baggers and eight runs batted in, for a 16-3 triumph.

Cleveland's Indians managed only an even break with the White Sox, taking the opener 5-3 on a three-run rally in the 10th and dropping the afterpiece, 4-3, in the ninth inning. The Tigers and Browns were idle.

For the first time in two weeks Bill Terry found a pitcher able to stop the parade, as Hubbell checked the Phillies, 1-0, behind Harry Gumbert's three-hit flinging. Since Pittsburgh's Pirates clouted a 9-0 beating at the hands of Chicago Cubs, the victory boosted the Giants to within 5 1-2 games of the Bucs' National League pace.

Jim Turner's seven-hit job led Boston Bees to a 2-1 victory over the Dodgers. Cincinnati Reds topped the Cardinals, 3-2, in night engagement.

Challenges Armstrong

Ceferino Garcia, ABOVE, top ranking challenger for the welterweight crown worn by Henry Armstrong, has filed a challenge and posted $2,000 with the New York Athletic Commission, for a title bout with the champion winding up the ring. Armstrong has until the end of November before he will be forced to defend the title he won from Barney Ross.

JUNIORS UNEARTH PITCHING FIND

Joe Doherty Lets Picton Down With Two Hits

Sensational hurling by young Joe Doherty, a pitching gift from baseball-loving Bloomfield, helped Kiwanis juniors, in which the youngster let down the Picton Juniors with two hits and a shut-out featured the game in Picton yesterday, the local kids winning the seven-inning pastime by a 2-0 score.

The game had no bearing on the loop standing, the Barrett kids having cinched the Quinte Junior League title last week, but they meet the winners of the Lakeshore Junior League, Wellington squad in the first-round playdowns in the near future.

Only twenty-three men faced the young hurler who was under his first baptism of fire in baseball circles. He struck out twelve batters and pitched no hit and no run baseball for the distance. It was not until the seventh chukker with one man down that Wright scratched a single through the infield for the first Picton hit of the game. Greer struck out and Grindrod bounced another one-baser down the third base line for second and the final Picton hit of the pastime.

Two Picton hurlers essayed to stop the league champions, Burley and Shannon both doing mound duty, although the former was credited for no seeming reason as only five hits were garnered by the Kiwanis kids from the brace of Picton chuckers.

The Kiwanis kids scored their first run in the third when Doherty reached third by virtue of a brace of Picton errors and scored when Guay drove a ringing single through short. The same batter paved the way for the second Belleville run when he tripled and scored after another Picton bobble had given Jarrell a life.

Guay led the hit parade of both squads amashing out a single, double, and triple for three of the Kiwanis safeties. Austin and Pepper contributed the remaining bits.

The teams —Belleville; McQuaid 2b; Ronsky c; Guay ss; Jarrell, 3b; Austin, lf; Pepper, cf; Doherty p; Clark lf; Dorsty p.

ODDS QUOTED 2-1 AGAINST TIGER SLUGGER

Jack Doyle Figures Odds Against Greenburg Beating Ruth's Mark

RECORD IS 60

By WILLIAM H. DUMSDAY

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Hampton Beach, N.H., Aug. 13 (CP)—Jack Doyle, who has become wealthy through a nice ability to weigh chances of this or that happening in the field of sport, figures the odds are 2 to 1 against Detroit's Hank Greenberg breaking the record of 60 runs Babe Ruth set in 1927.

The ace New York betting commissioner today told The Canadian Press he considered Greenberg "a wonderful player and a grand fellow" and wished he didn't have to be a pessimist about his chances of lifting one of baseball's most coveted marks.

However, he foresaw too many hurdles to believe the Tigers' big Jewish first baseman could surpass the mark the bambino established when he was chief assassin of the New York Yankees's "Murderer's Row."

While rabid Detroit fans pointed out that Hank has gotten in 100 games while the Ruthian bat needed 111 games to top that total, Doyle basked in the sunshine at this resort centre and expected:

Hank to run into trouble and perhaps the Babe's greatest effort was to be his own undoing. The most of his games were played in New York and he was combing at the pitches in the Yankee loop, insofar as Belleville is concerned, they cannot be euchred out of a playoff berth, as they are certified for first place by Napanee.

When the Kingston "Locos" skimmed in to Belleville Gibbards 8 to 5 last evening, the distinction of the Bay of Quinte League took on a much different complex. All but counted out last week, the "Locos" have won their last two games and tied another inside of a week, putting them right on the heels of the Picton squad in the race for playoff berth in the Quinte loop. Insofar as Belleville is concerned, they cannot be euchred out of a playoff berth, as they are certified for first place by Napanee.

With the O.B.A. play-off season rapidly approaching the Quinte League executive have ordered two games played on Monday, both having been previously postponed. Kingston will play an afternoon game at Belleville, while Napanee goes to Picton. Picton and Kingston are battling strenuously for play-off berths and anything may happen. Incidentally it has been suggested that Dean's whole arm ailment can be traced to his recent visit to Detroit. Detroit is the city where the big league ace is a lad named Billy Wilson, Akron's city champion, who is considered one of the real premier drivers of "soap box" racers, and the sentiment, according to the Akron press, May-be Belleville's Wilson lad will be able to say after the race on Sunday.

It was just 24 hours prior to the unlucky 13th when Wes Ferrell was handed his walking ticket from the Washington baseball club and another baseball bombshell was dropped when Walter (Rabbit) Maranville handed in his resignation as manager of the Montreal Royals, and Manager Hooks of the respective clubs straighten into the home stretch with no doubt in their effect on baseball in general, making the boys sit up and take notice—figuring that "or else" angle.

HODGE PODGE: Heard at Coleman Flats last night—"If that Corby team would show as much interest in the game as they do quibbling about umpires, they might get some place"; to which we add the conventional "amen". Scoop — "Two-ton" Tony Galento is on the water wagon", but not because of choice but rather conditions, he's still confined to bed. . . . We're anxious to witness the reception Wilbur Wilson will receive at the hands of his former friends here on Monday. Human nature, and baseball sometimes tickle, so Johnny had better be ready for a verbal barrage.

Fights Last Night

Detroit—Dave Clark, 171, Detroit Negro, knocked out Pete Georgi, 171, Pittsburgh city, 2.

Hollywood— Lou Salica, 120, Brooklyn, outpointed Pablo Dano, 121 1-2, Manila (10).

WITH THE LAWN BOWLERS

GEO. E. WATKIN

At last the ladies were fortunate in the weather was good to them and the rain held off. Prizes were awarded on Thursday. The bowling was good and the eats were better and from observation everyone had a real good time.

Not one of the Belleville teams were in the prizes but that does not say that they did not put up a real good game. For instance, Hyde and Byer gave out one shot from first prize and several other teams were very close.

One of the Belleville teams had eight scored on them in one end by Mrs. Whitby of Stirling. Good going.

Mrs. O'Conner trying to bring up a short bowl. "Come on Mother is walking for you".

All members of our club were sorry to hear of the death of Charlie Sulman's brother in Chatham. The club extend their sympathy.

Bill Whitby and Harry Heagle were enjoying a game on our greens Thursday night.

Team losing—This green is terrible.

Team winning—Why it is a perfect green.

Arrangements are being made up to put on another district Bingo on Friday 19th inst., Keep the date open.

Three clubs went to Stirling on Wednesday but were unable to play on account of the rain. There was a good crowd and eighteen rinks. Hard luck Stirling. Give us mixed doubles next will be the cure.

Several have not paid their dues yet. Mark needs the money. "How about it?"

Three Belleville teams journeyed to Madoc for the annual mixed doubles there yesterday and returned with many honors of the day well-tucked away in the bag. Mr. and Mrs. John Shaw, our worthy president, if you please, walked off with first prize, being first with three wins high. Mrs. Cross and Joe Black were first with two wins high and Mrs. Wonnacott and George Wonnacott first with one win high, so you see our Belleville bowlers really do uphold our club's good name while visiting

MONTREAL'S NEW SENIOR TEAM GETS DOWN TO WORK

August may be the golf, tennis or baseball season for most people, but for some it's time to get out the cleats and molekins and get down to the serious business of getting into shape for the rugby season. Montreal is the scene of unusual activity this year as the gridiron stalwarts gather around the banner of Nationals, new entry in the Ontario Rugby Football Union with most of the players from what used to be the Indians of the Big Four turning out for practice. What the latter team will do for players this year remains to be seen. Fifteen Indians have signed with the O. R. F. U. squad already. Here are some of the double-and triple threat men who will face Sailmy Reagan, Sarnia and Peterborough in what looks like the best season in years for the DeGrucky loop. Standing

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Chris was finding what he had come for. There was material here. How much material! Life was cheap in old pre-war Vienna. Fifty thousand people a year in the great hospital alone, and two hundred thousand patients. Enough after an hour the bell tolled another death and it was hardly possible to move about the streets without encountering a funeral cortege. And there was a constant stream of births to death. It made for careful diagnosis, that. Men could not afford to make mistakes which were certain to be discovered.

He had to get all he could in the time at his disposal, and within his means. Nothing was free, except possibly that he was getting thirty dollars a week for Kaiis and himself, with coal extra. Meals, too, sometimes, for he could not always get back to the two o'clock dinner at the pension. He would go home to Kaiis tired and often impatient, to find her down in that dreary room.

"Haven't you been out?"

"It's been raining. I suppose you didn't notice that!"

She was like a cat, hating rain, and it was almost always raining that fall.

"I suppose there's no use asking if we're going anywhere tonight," she would say wistfully.

She had begun to sink into a morass of self-pity. She had been gay enough in Paris, but the old medieval city of Vienna frightened her, and she seemed detached and far away.

There were better days, of course. Days when Kaiis went out to work in some storerooms made into a movie, and when she wore boots and smoked, and between reels an usher went about with a spray gun, disinfecting the air. Then she would go home to find the room lighted, and some good food on the table, and Kaiis herself carefully dressed and waiting.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Shortly before Christmas Chris found himself, to his surprise, on the committee of a local charity. He and was asked to help prepare for the Christmas dance. Kaiis went to the Kirchnerdance and had refused a new evening dress.

She was wearing the dress, and she and Chris were gayly dancing at the club, on the afternoon of that day in early December when Beverly took her usual flowers to the dead man. She had her own key to the mausoleum, and she opened the door and went in alone. It was dim, but the lights were on, and she drew a fur coat around her as she sat down on the marble bench.

After a time she slipped down on her knees and made her usual prayer there, that God and his angels have him in their keeping and happy, and not to let her be alone. Oh, never to let her be alone. For she had chosen to be alone that night in some ways Annie had always been with Alexis as she knew she was alone now. Not that she put that in her prayer. That was done and she got up, smiling.

She placed her flowers on the top of the mausoleum, satisfied she went out again. The car was waiting in the road, and a fine snow was falling. All around lay the dead buried trees and buried hopes.

Like London the beautiful, dusty Face..... She shivered, remembering.

She ate a dinner that night for her father's friends; and she was stung, while smiling, over the flowers, the silver, and the hothouse fruit, when the Votivkirche with its carillon began ringing and proclaiming three o'clock of a Vienna morning and the birthday of the Christ Child, and Chris, having had too much sweet champagne, was taking home an Irish Katie.

"You've had too much to drink."

"It's Christmas only once a year, Katie."

"And don't call me Miss. My name is Katherine, if you can pronounce it."

"Merry Christmas, Katherine!"

He fell asleep in the taxi, and in his sleep he went back to the Lewis house on a Christmas Eve long ago. Jake was dead and Staunton Lewis was slipping away, gone to the telephone. Then he was sleeping, and Beverly was trying to rouse him for hot coffee.

"Chris! What's the matter? Are you anyhow? Get out and pay the cab driver."

The porter was shivering as he lighted the small candles which were to set him up the stairs, and he received his ten Hellers—or two cents—with a muffled "Danke."

Chris climbed rather uncertainly behind him. She was a few steps ahead, small, indomitable in her own way, ruthless. It seemed incredible that they should be there, climbing that staircase together. There was something wrong about it. Katie carrying her determined little candle and he fascinating it. He had never wanted her. But at the top, because he had had too much wine and because he was sorry he had ever married her, he took her in his arms and kissed her.

"A Merry Christmas, darling."

She relaxed in his arms for a time, was not defiant now, nor determined. She was in's and, for a time, it was worth now and forever, he was here.

"You looked very lovely tonight."

"Did I, Chris? I thought you hadn't noticed."

He did not go into their room at once, however. He wandered into the salon and looked at the Christmas tree which had been lighted earlier in the evening was still there. It sat in the centre of the table, with the stein marks covered now by a cluster of candles. Around it was a group; the Wise Men, the Mother, the shepherd and his sheep, and there was a small wicker cradle for the Child Himself. But the candles had melted and run down, and there would be had set a wine-glass near the cradle. Chris carefully removed it.

There were plenty of straws in little shops in Russia and Europe as armed camp, watchful and wary. German bands in the streets of London. There'd give them money. They're all spies." A small secret police in Vienna, secret even from the old man who drove cars daily from the Hofburg in an open carriage, going from France and being acclaimed as he drove with his escort along the streets of London; and with Prussian soldiers strutting along the narrow streets of Berlin, and Austrians and Americans, who looked English, and goose step, the tireless French marching step, and Italians and even the British. And spies, spies everywhere.

Spies. Airplanes. Submarines. Poison gas. War. Ridiculous! Nevertheless there was war. And that's why? Why in the name of the Christ Child?

In America business was not good, with production still overcoming overexpansion. Staunton Lewis fighting a stiffe now; locking horns with the Wall Street bear by river. The strikers discovered the fact that night and fired on it, but the bear went on with his business.

It was that winter that the Annie Lewis Research Laboratory began its primary purpose the study and investigation of cancer. Beverly knew nothing of it until she saw the notices in the newspapers, but it touched her deeply. She saw behind it her father's loneliness and her mother's his remorse.

Beverly went regularly to the hospital, for she had taken her mother's place on the Woman's Board. The hospital seemed empty and silent without Chris in his long white coat striding along with his head thrust forward. She would stir uneasily in her chair.

"I have to report from the Needlework Guild the receipt of three dozen ruler towels, two dozen tea towels, ten dozen...."

Why had he married that girl? How could he? She was cheap, common. The other nurses were different, but she was.

After the meeting there would be tea. They would go downstairs to Miss Nellie's sitting room and the tea table would be there; the big old urn, the delicate lemon, little cakes, sandwiches. Miss Nellie in black silk dress behind the table as she poured her own tea. Roses on the desk, the clatter of cups and saucers, and over all, the hum of soft elderly voices.

Yes over, they would rustle out, well-dressed, well-bred women, going back to their cars—to what? Were they happy? Was any one really happy? She would smile at them, her wide young smile, and they would smile in return.

"You are like your mother, Beverly."

"I wish I were."

Then one cold day when the snow lay heavy in the courtyard outside the windows and the car was late in coming for her, she found herself by Miss Nellie's fire in a low chair, and all the others gone. She turned suddenly and faced the older woman.

"Why did he do it, Miss Nellie? Why did he ever marry her?"

"Chris?"

"Yes, Chris. She wasn't the wife for him. He must have known it."

"Perhaps we are both to blame, Beverly. He was so much in love with you. When you let him go—I wrote him. He never answered."

"He must have been terribly hurt. He is proud, my dear. You know that."

Beverly said nothing for a moment. She sat looking at the fire, watching her face from it with its hand which were Jerry's ring. Then she stirred.

"As to love with him, too. I suppose in a way I always shall be."

Her face was sombre under her hide hat; and Miss Nellie, who knew as much about Jerry as most and perhaps more, felt her heart contract sharply. These two young creatures, so unnecessarily suffering. Time would heal it, of course. They would live on and forget, and some day even smile over it, but not now.

"Perhaps it's better as it is, Miss Nellie. His work will always come first with him, and I want it to do that."

"Yes. His work would have to come first, of course."

"Then when he attacked Father Time—"

"He was right to do that, Beverly. It had to be done. Have you never thought of that?"

"But at such a time!"

"That was the only time, to be effective."

Then and there she told Beverly of Chris's marriage; of that wild last night of his, with Kaiis dancing with him in hands and no place for her, and his promise to Henry. Standing there at her door Miss Nellie had seen it all in the carship sailing the next day and that girl outside in a taxicab.

"He went out to get her, and when he didn't come back—If I'd only known! If I had dreamed for a moment that he would do what he did——"

"But why? Even then why marry her?"

"I think she had threatened some dreadful thing. Perhaps to kill herself, or to go on the street for a living. Well, it's done now. No use worrying about it. God in a long time I get a girl like that here. He is often. And she may be good for Chris. She's young and ambitious. She'll want things, and Chris will have to supply them. That is better for a man than not that hour or two had a wife anything she couldn't have without him."

Beverly flushed. "I see," she said slowly. "I see. I never think Chris ought to marry me."

"He is very fond of you, dear. He would always want to make his own way."

She got up, drawing on her long gloves, picking up her handsome fur coat. "He must have cared for her, I still think that."

"Cared for her! There are a lot of things, my dear, that men care for a woman, and not be in love with her. You know that. Chris is very young. Don't think of him as the face out of which all the carnival youth had already gone. "I'm an old woman, and I've seen a lot of living. He has his work and his life, and he'll turn him again."

"It'll never hurt him again."

One night as Miss Simpson sat alone in her room by a dying fire, the telephone beside her rang.

"Do you remember that Ursula Smith who had a baby here and died the fall? She's back. It looks like pneumonia.

Miss Simpson sat up suddenly. "Where is she?"

"In Ward. She didn't want a room."

"I'll go up."

Ursula Smith lived for three days. On either side of her bed watched a nurse in white and blue. They stretched on and on, thousands of beds, millions. They went on and on, all around the world. Sometimes she slept, but not often, and a time came when her breathing seemed to her to fill the ward. She could hear it herself. It was pain, breath pain. If she had none to spare for talk, so she lay silent, saving her breath. Sometimes, day or night—she did not know—she would see a dark face sitting erect beside her, an elderly woman with her hair bundled back from her face, and one day she found herself shut in with that figure, the other beds swept out. They sat together in a small white misty world, the two of them, and Ursula knew that the screens were up, and what that meant.

She made a terrific effort and whispered, "Give my baby to Doctor Arden."

"I'll find a home for him, Ursula. You can trust me."

But she shook her head. "To Doctor Arden." she persisted in that difficult whisper. "You heard me?"

"Yes. I'll tell him."

She died that night, and the next day Miss Simpson wrote to Chris.

"I have the baby here," she said, "and we can keep him for a while at least. But I do feel, Chris, that this at least is not your problem. I can find a good family to adopt the child, and I beg you to let me do it. I must, however, fulfill my promise to her, and tell you that the left the child to you."

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF W. HUNTINGDON CIRCUIT MARKED

Rev. Dr. Reddick Urges Zeal on Part of Church Members

West Huntingdon, August 10th—(special)—The memorial at the West Huntingdon United Circuit observed the 50th anniversary of the present arrangement in the circuit, the West Huntingdon, Moira, Fuller and Eggleton appointments.

The theme of the anniversary seemed to revolve itself to these words, "Honoring Our Forefathers." Special mention was made at all of the services of the untiring efforts of those who in bygone days sacrificed much and amid serious handicaps that they and their children might have suitable places in which to worship.

Rev. Dr. C. S. Reddick, of Campbellford, a former pastor of twenty years ago, was the special minister for the ten Sunday services. Dr. Reddick's theme for both morning and evening services was "The Wealth of the Church." He said, "I do not want to speak on churches in the abstract, but to you people I want to leave a challenge that you will never want to think about during the coming days. The burden of Dr. Reddick's message to the church people today might be filled with the sacrifices of the early pioneers of old were filled with after the Resurrection and Ascension of our Lord at the Crucifixion, they undismayed but after the Resurrection they were filled with power.

The choir at West Huntingdon in the morning were members of former choirs who formerly sang in Huntingdon appointments. Mrs. Ernest Wilson, Stirling, who has so willingly helped for many years at Eggleton, contributed a solo.

Mrs. Wm. Wilson presided over their organ, was assisted by members from Fuller appointment.

Lawn Social

On Monday evening a lawn social was held on the church lawn at West Huntingdon. There was a short stereopticon service over the circuit, also a large number from the Anglican congregation and other points. The Salvation Army Band from Campbellford assisted by members of the band at Stirling. Ice cream furnished excellent music during the entire evening and sacred music and band marches were played.

Rev. W. R. Tristram was chairman for the evening's entertainment. Another feature was the reading of the Doxology, led by the band; Several gospel songs; Piano duet, Mrs. Gordon Rollinger and Mrs. Joe Williams of Moira; Instrumental duet, Mrs. Wm. Wilson Trevor, Hill and Margaret Elliott; Duet by Mrs. W. Pilchett and Frank Palmer; Solo by the Fuller Quartette composed of Messrs. Geo. Wilson, Ernest Wilson, Ross Macauley and Frank Palmer; Piano duet by Mrs. Pigdeon and Dorothy Wilson; Male Quartette composed of Mrs. Russell Stapley, Kenneth Wilson, Ernest Wilson and Carr supplied the music while lunch was being served.

Special services for the evening was Mr. Geo. A. Kingston, of Toronto, who gave a very interesting and amusing address on, "Happenings of 50 Years Ago Around West Huntingdon."

Lights Turned On

Russian Airmen Lost One Year Ago

Edmonton, Aug. 13—(CP)—One year ago today Sergeant-Major Levanefsiky and five fellow Russian airmen took off from Moscow in a four-motored airplane on a trans-polar flight to North America and a hoped-for long-distance record for flying "third." Word has not since been seen.

Somewhere in the vast Arctic the big ship went down. Pilots of three nations, Russia, Alaska, and Canada joined in the search concentrated at a spot in the Beaufort Sea some 1,500 miles north of Point Barrow, Alaska. It was from that area that the last signals from the plane were believed to have come.

LOST DOLLER

For Pret sake what a question, pop said, and ma said, Your answer is a confession of guilt, as what more definite proof do you want?

It's a womans world, here's your doller with compound interst plus war detis, pop said.

And he gave her a 5 doller bill and got in back of the sporting page.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking to himself in his private chair and ma said, Willyum, I want my doller.

I dont blame you, who's got it? pop said, and ma said, Why you flave, of course.

I hope I've been enjoying it, but it's all news to me, pop said. On the several occasions when I've had a doller of yours, an average time of 3 minutes has elapsed before you demanded it back, so thats proof that I've had no doller of yours in the passed 5 minutes, and if I'd had one within the passed 4 minutes and 59 seconds the chances are that I'd remember it, he said, and ma said, I've wrecked and ruined my braines and exhausted every remote possibility, so I know that I neither lost it nor spent it, in other words it all narrows down to the only remaining explination, you absent mindedly picked it up from a table or somewhere and stuck it in your pocket the way men do, she said.

I could swear I haven't got a bill lower than 5 dollers, pop said.

And he took all the money out of his pockets and he didn't have a single doller bill, and ma said, That doesn't prove a thing, this particular doller I'm alluding to disappeared about 3 days ago.

Yes good, I give up, he mean theoretically, because you're not going to get that doller without some definite proof, pop said, and ma said, But I have definite proof, then you remember in so many words that you didn't pick up a doller bill and put it in your pocket while your mind was elsewhere? she said.

REAL PICTURE ONLY A MEMORY

Cleveland Party Secures Pictures But Not of The Big Bear

Dr. Harvey Sculp, Cleveland physician, T. J. Beardman, portrait artist and Wm. Stead, manufacturer also from Cleveland, spent the past month or so on their annual summer vacation through Ontario recording the sights of nature on celluloid film with a small movie camera for future use. But this week, camping at Bell Rapids, in Bangor Township, North Hastings, they missed the best picture of their tour, they confided to attendants of a downtown service station, while awaiting minor repairs to the physician's car.

En route home they will carry with them only the visual memory of the first black bear they had ever seen encountered while picking a few huckleberries for camp use near their camp this week. Their camera of which they had several of the best, had been left behind in the tent.

Bear Only Yard Away

Dr. Sculp came face to face with the bear, which was described by him as a "large and mean looking one", first as he edged toward one side of the bush where the berries grew thickest. The bear apparently engaged in the same task of berry picking, suddenly reared up on hind legs and faced him but a yard or so away. The warmth of his fetid breath could reportedly be felt, so close was the animal.

With a startled shout Dr. Harvey dropped the half filled honey pail, and promptly beat a retreat. He believes the bear also took to its heels in the opposite direction, as hastily as himself. "And if animal I was scared," related the doctor, "I have heard bears would not bother humans, but you don't think of that when you meet one face to face".

Chance for Picture Missed

His camping companions, alarmed by the shout, hastened to the doctor's side to find him several yards away from the bush, mopping a wet brow, and waving vaguely at a thick bush through which Bruin had disappeared.

"What a chance for a picture," later lamented the doctor. "All we saw during our trip through the north were a few rabbits, groundhogs and one porcupine. We had hoped to see and photograph a few deer."

WILL PUT CROWN ON ROAD IN TWEED

County Committee Considers Various Matters at Meeting

Agreements claimed by reeves of Five Municipalities County Engineer to be made with county officials several years ago, with regard to the paving of streets running through their various communities, the contents of which precipitated heated discussion at the June session of the Hastings County Council, will again be aired at a special meeting to be held here next week, at which members of the Roads and Bridges Committee will meet the reeves with a view to a satisfactory settlement.

Decision to confer with the village reeves was made at the regular meeting of the Roads and Bridges Committee held in Shire Hall yesterday. A report will be made to county council at the December session.

Included in the business conducted was the decision by the committee to erect a crown on the existing pavement on Colborne Street in the village of Tweed, at a cost of $700.00.

The committee decided to accept the offer of Sidney Township to supply gravel for maintenance of the Wallbridge-Belleville road, County Road No. 1 at a cost of 80 cents per yard. Work will start on this project in the near future, the committee decided.

An amount of calcium chloride and oil far in excess of that used in former years has been placed on various parts of the county road system, County Road Superintendent W. H. Langlois told the committee, Freedom from dust and other traveling hazards has resulted, he pointed out.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. R. Thomson, Dominion Meteorological Service

Forecasting the weather! The principle first used in forecasting the weather was that weather travels. This principle was and is still good. The theory is that our changes in weather are brought about by the travelling cyclones and anticyclones. Cyclones, low pressure areas, are associated with windy, cloudy and wet weather; and anticyclones with calm and clear weather. Forecasting on this principle consisted in studying the paths of the cyclones and anticyclones as shown on the current weather maps, estimating how far when they would pass over a station, and forecasting accordingly. The best forecasters were those who could best keep in their minds the typical conditions.

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Aug. 5 (CP)—Pressure is high on the Atlantic and Pacific and cool to the immediate westward of Hudson Bay with a deep disturbance over Davis Straits and a trough of low extending from the Labrador coast southward over the Quebec and the Great Lakes to the Southwest States. ## Jap Gains Nil on Yangste River Since July 26, Despite Bitter Fighting

Shanghai, Aug. 15—(AP)— A survey of the Yangtse river front showed today that Japanese gains have been almost negligible since the capture of Kiukiang July 26, despite bitter fighting on both sides of the river and easy aerial bombardments.

A Japanese column which struck southward from Kiukiang along the Nanchang railway 20 days ago has advanced only 12 miles and is now engaged with strongly entrenched Chinese troops in the hills near Shahokow.

Another Japanese force operating south of the Yangtse has advanced 26 miles from Kiukiang but is meeting desperate resistance on the shores of Red Lake and in the hills before Julchang.

Japanese army reports said the fall of Jiuchang was imminent, but military observers said capture of the town would leave the invaders a difficult advance of 25 miles to their goal, the Candero-Hankow railway which they hope to cut south of the provisional capital.

On the north bank of the river, the Japanese have spent the past 13 days fighting off repeated Chinese counter-attacks without advancing a mile nearer Hankow.

Chinese guerrillas continued to carry on their hamstringing activities in the Japanese-controlled provinces, particularly in Shansi, Honan and Shantung.

HIGHWAY WORKER STRUCK BY CAR DIES IN HOSPITAL

Stanley Jackson, Marmora, Victim of Accident Near Village

INQUEST WEDNESDAY

Stanley Jackson, 43 year old Marmora employee of the Department of Highways, died in Peterborough General Saturday afternoon following injuries received when he was struck by a car said by police to be driven by Percy Hanley, Hastings, under east of Marmora Village on Highway No. 7.

An inquest into the circumstances surrounding the death of Jackson has been ordered held in Havelock on Wednesday by Coroner Dr. R. Tweed, Campbellford.

Jackson was given first aid treatment at the scene of the accident by Dr. E. Crawford, Marmora, and was rushed to hospital by ambulance where he died shortly after midnight.

According to police Jackson was employed repairing loose gravel on that part of the highway, using a hand fork, and that when they were dumped by department trucks. In a statement given to Provincial Police Constable Arthur Dymond, investigating officer, Cleary said that he dodged left and stepped back on the road, then back on again.

TOURIST CAMP IN CITY PRAISED

In over 5,000 miles of automobile travel in the United States and Canada this fall when the Bowerman family of North Miami Fla., did not encounter a tourist camp better equipped, or one in which so much personal attention and service was given, than Dundas's own East Dundas street camp, city council has been informed. Letters of appreciation received from the family at Florida bear this out.

"We arrived home last week, and still have memories of our brief but very pleasant stay in your city and the visitors. "We hope we can come again next year and stay twice as long."

FIRST STEPS ON REPORT IS TAKEN

First steps toward the preparation of a complete report on civic control for presentation to city council will be taken today by Alderman Frank Seminko, chairman of the Regional Planning Committee of Council, when he and Solicitor Clark Mott will make a complete survey of the district previously affected by the annexation of 1937 and 1938.

Following this report to council it has been assured that authority for whatever work is decided upon will be forthcoming. A report on the situation at city hall will permit, it was Alderman Jennings this morning.

Papa Dionne Willing to Sacrifice If Allowed to Live With Quints

Toronto, Aug. 15—(CP)— The Toronto Globe and Mail today published a copyright story from North Bay that Oliva Dionne, father of the quintuplets, would be willing to give up his business of selling souvenirs of the famous quintuplets and the rest of his family to the same restrictions imposed on the quints if he were allowed to live in a new home with his famous daughters.

While Dionne families met in North Bay today to decide whether Annette, Cecile, Marie, Yvonne and Emilie should spend next year to leave their present home, Dafoe hospital, Corbeil, or move with Papa Dionne farm home, for a new one in an undisclosed area somewhere in the parish of Corbeil or for a new home with their parents.

Whichever decision, have the children in some larger area in a permanent place on the shore of a lake," said Judge J. A. Valin, one of the guardians. "However, we may not be able to come to an agreement on that."

Following a conference of the guardians last May, it was reported it had been decided to build a new home for the five girls at a site in which they would be reunited with their family. It was indicated that the property had been taken last May had not been definite.

Wants Home on Homestead

Dionne, who frequently has criticized the guardians' stewardship, declared he wanted to appeal to the building of a new home anywhere except on his homestead where he and his 14 children were born.

Dr. A. R. Dafoe, physician to the quintuplets and their family, said some arrangements must be made for the children in larger quarters. He would like to see them "all kept together," but "those buildings were built when they were only triplets. We're not sure at that time there were the children would live. They are overcrowded. Why all five are sleeping in one room. That room has been torn down."

It is understood Dr. Dafoe assisted that the quints have a large park area, on a lake, for a home, but is opposed to their being taken away from the Callander district.

"Where else could they be better?" he said in answer to a question. "They were born here; it is a healthy country. Their parents are here."

NATIONS WATCH CONCENTRATIONS OF GERMAN UNITS

Military Display May Be Used to Impress Czechoslovakia

DANGER OF INCIDENTS

Mobilization of Private Motor Vehicles to Transport Troops

Paris, Aug. 15.—(CP-Havas)—Impending German military manoeuvres may be designed to exert indirect pressure on the British and other governments in behalf of the German Sudeten minority in Czechoslovakia, the Paris newspaper Petit Parisien (Independent) reported today.

Military movements in the Reich formed the cardinal topic of conversation in diplomatic circles here as expressing concern over their purpose.

Manoeuvres May Cause Pressure

Foreign diplomats in Berlin believe the manoeuvres may be used by Germany to help pressure on Viscount Runciman, unofficial British envoy, to induce President the Sudeten problem in Czechoslovakia, and thus indirectly influence the British, French and Czechoslovak governments, Le Petit Parisien reported.

Le Journal (Independent) in dispatches from London said informed sources were filled with unreasiness over the situation in the Reich, the optimistic attitude adopted by official quarters.

Germany Uneasy

The press reported the manoeuvres were causing mounting uneasiness within Germany itself and constituted the principal theme of private conversations.

Vladimir D'Ormesson in Le Figaro (Conservative), said the German leaders are in error if they believe the reports regarding the manoeuvres were solely the work of malevolent newspapermen. The reports have been largely due to statements

Canadian-U. S. Border One of Most Amazing Structures in All History

More Symbolic Than Real, Says Writer Back From Europe—New International Bridge at The Thousand Islands Will Add Another Stone to Great Structure —Newspaperman Finds Almost Unbelievable Difference in Countryside—Found Courtesy Everywhere Along Border.

Editor's note: Andrew Berding, who wrote the following story, is a member of the Washington staff of the Associated Press. He returned to the United States last winter after spending 12 years in Europe, the last time as chief of The Associated Press Bureau in Rome, Italy.

By ANDREW BERDING
Associated Press Staff Writer
Gananoque, Ont., Aug. 15—(AP) — Prime Minister Mackenzie King and President Roosevelt dedicate the new International Bridge across the St. Lawrence river at the Thousand Islands on Aug. 18 and will add another stone to one of the most amazing structures in history —the Canadian-United States border.

The writer has just travelled along hundreds of miles of this border while studying the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway project which long has been under consideration by the governments of Europe and America.

After 12 years spent in Europe, it was almost unbelievable experience. Gone were passport formalities, customs inspections, currency formalities, the usual half-hour wait beneath the guns and fingers of guards and officials.

The writer had and desired no passport or visa, no candid camera and a pair of field glasses—all kinds of equipment in Europe. There was no trouble.

In Canada he travelled along the border—something that has not been possible in Europe these days. But here there was courtesy. The language was the same, the people seem the same, signs were different—being in both English and French—automobiles had the same appearance, the same size Canadian and United States currency had equal acceptance, the postage being practically at par.

The writer paid for nothing with a $5 Canadian banknote and got in change two United States dollars, two Canadian dollars and mixed silver of both countries.

$960 Boundary Markers

Frequently you see boundary markers defining the 3,536 miles of border between the United States (including Alaska) and Canada. There are 8,060 such monuments. On one side of the monument you see the words "United States" and "International Line" and on the other "Canada" and "International Line." Also the number of the monument. Each cost $960 and on the average is placed every 2 miles.

Occasionally you come across a border forest path, a clearing 20 to 60 feet wide has been cut through the woods to keep the boundary line open and the border monuments visible. Fifteen hundred miles of this border is inaccessible.

At international highways handsome ornamental concrete shafts mark the boundary, one on each side of the road. Bridges are sometimes built so that the center of the boundary runs through a body of water the monuments are placed in the water.

High Praise for Commissioners

The work of the Canadian and United States commissioners of the International Boundary Commission, Noel Ogilvie and Thomas Riggs, has met with high praise. Typical of the feeling across the border is the fact that the two commissioners have been warm friends from the time 35 years ago when they were young surveyors together in the Canada Rockies.

The writer had occasion to cross back into the United States before to visit strategic points of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence project. On neither occasion was his name asked. Only the fact that he was born in Ohio, his wife in Tennessee and his daughter in Rome, Italy. From this last birthplace caused no comment. The border seemed more symbolic than real.

(Exclusive to The Ontario Intelligencer)

Akron, Ohio, Aug. 15.—While a little band of cream-dirted members of the Belleville Kinsmen club from faraway Canada cheered themselves hoarse, diminutive Bobby Wilson, twelve-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Percy E. Wilson, 111 Chatham Street, Belleville, Ontario, won the Canadian championship car across the finish line a few yards in the rear of Bobby Berger, Omaha, Nebraska, United States champion, to annex second place for the Maple Leaf of Canada, in the International Soap Box Derby held at Derby Downs here yesterday.

In another column of this issue will be found a letter of instruction to all cheese graders from Mr. J. F. Singleton, Associate Director, Marketing Services, Dairy Products Division, warning graders not to undertake grading of any cheese in boxes whose weight or identifying numbers are not clearly legible.

For some time past graders have been loud in their complaints regarding this illegibility.

Factories will take this as the last warning. We have no other remarks to offer to grade. Where cheese lots which are not thus clearly marked" stated Mr. J. H. Irvin, Production Dairy Grader of the local office on receipt of the communication.

3 BRITISH SHIPS HIT BY BOMBS IN PORT VALENCIA

One Briton Killed And Two Others Injured

REFORMATORY HIT

Valencia, Aug. 15—(CP-Havas)—One Briton was killed and two were injured when insurgent bombs hit three British ships at 9.30 G.m.t. the port of Valencia, and Alicante today.

The casualties occured aboard the British destroyer Hasty, sixteen and the Predavore when insurgent airmen blasted this city and its port, in early morning raids. The explosions opened a hole in the ship's hull. Workmen started to repair the damage. No casualties were reported aboard the ship.

Reformatory Hit

Two of the explosive hit a reformatory at Alicante inflicting an unestimated number of casualties. Incendiary bombs damaged a number of other buildings. Insurgent warplane detachments failed to bring down any craft.

The insurgent airmen who attacked Valencia, Alicante and Sagunto dropped about 100 explosives. One missile set fire to four buildings in the Pinedo quarter, killing a woman and her daughter and injuring several other persons.

MORE INDUCEMENTS FOR TOURISTS NEEDED

"We should do more to attract visitors and tourists to this city. The amount of money left in other places by these friendly callers during the year is colossal and we should get it just as much as any other place" said Mayor Jamieson this morning.

One of the inducements for tourists would be the construction of suitable mooring docks on Victoria Park. The present docks are small and badly decayed baulks which have been in place for years. This season 500 feet of new docking will be built, has missed many of the regular boats which have been unable to tie up owing to insufficient accommodation, pointed out the mayor. "Before Council go see if something can't be done on the park about this. We should have a concrete sidewalk around the park for local residents," stated the Mayor.

City Police Henceforth Will Enforce Rigidly the One Hour Parking Law

Veterans of the Great War, and others connected with His Majesty's Forces will tell you that the first drunk in the army is a free one.

In somewhat similar vein, city police officers who inaugurated a parking campaign Saturday night are more rigidly enforce the one-hour parking laws and will not tolerate parking overtime, more or less innocent victims to the police station, it was learned today. One was attracted by Sergeant Booth as to the time he had been parked and when should they err again, and sent on their way with kind but firm instructions to "sin no more."

One by one they entered the police court, some with heads bowed, clenched in nervous hands. And many and varied were the excuses offered by the boys and gals who, inadvertently had left the family car parked in a parking space that calls for sixty seconds sojourn only.

While the majority of the drivers were out-of-town visitors, there was a sprinkling of local motorists one outstanding case being that of a Coleman Street resident, who had lived on that non-parking street for years, and was duly pleaded ignorance of the bylaw.

Definite Adont Time

Another claimed that the sign near the McCarthy theatre read from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. as he definitely sure that the figures were illegible, and that another told the desk sergeant, that his gears had broken down, and he could not move the car from where it was being fixed. The majority pleaded guilty, but definitely assured Sergeant Booth, that no such thing as a repetition would occur again.

Slowly the parade filed in the police court, and as each driver she placed her car in a proper parking place. Another left it there, while she was doing the shopping, and forgot about the sixty-minute bylaw. A gentleman, apparently tickled to death that he was being let off without a fine launched into a tirade of narrow escapes in other cities, and assured

GERMANY BEGINS MANOEUVRES ON GIGANTIC SCALE

Training Chiefly Near Czechoslovakia And French Borders

1,000,000 INVOLVED

Berlin, Aug. 14—(CP)—Chancellor Hitler looked on today as reserve forces of rearmed Germany started extensive war manoeuvres that are to blanket almost every part of the nation.

The Reichsfuehrer's personal attendance was evidenced in a telegram of encouragement which said he witnessed a military display at Juterbog, one of Germany's largest military training grounds 40 miles south of Berlin. No details of his visit or of the manoeuvres were announced.

Juterbog is noted especially as a training camp for reserve officers such as will direct the first drive of the war. Thousands of games for the instruction of German army reserves, keeping them up to date with new tactics and weapons.

The manoeuvres apparently were a demonstration of the speed of motorized army transport.

Czechs Withdraw Alarm

Dispatches from Czechoslovakia seemed to bear out the belief, which could not be confirmed here, that Great Britain and France last week made informal inquiries in Berlin concerning the nature of Germany's manoeuvres.

Praha reports said the two governments had been told the manoeuvres were without warlike aims which to some extent allayed Czechoslovak fears.

The official German news agency DNB issued a statement apparently designed to lessen apprehension concerning the war games, saying exaggerated reports were the result of attempt by interested foreign circles to stir up uneasiness in the European general public."

Berlin, Aug. 15.—(AP)—Germany's army manoeuvres will fall next week-ends to permit visits to the Nuremberg party congress, it was learned today.

Preparations for the two weeks of reserve training were noted chiefly in movements of troops close to Czechoslovakia and to France but they extended also to the districts around Berlin.

There were no official figures on how many men participate in military observers estimated the number at 500,000 to a possible 1,000,000.

Although other countries notably Great Britain and France, gave evidence of great concern at the scale of mobilize of the manoeuvres an effort was made here to say what were termed "exaggerated and disturbing reports."

PREMIER OF B. C. MAKES PROPOSAL FOR CONFERENCE

Quesnel Meeting Supports Project to Populate Farms

SHIPPERS INTERESTED

Sir Henry Page Croft is Impressed With Scheme

Quesnel, B.C., Aug. 15.—(CP)— A proposal by Premier T. D. Pattullo that possibly British migration to unoccupied Canadian farm lands be studied by a conference of Dominion and Provincial governments and representatives of Canada's two major railway systems, was endorsed here yesterday.

Leading business men, ranchers and farming representatives heard members of the Boards of Trade of Williams Lake and Quesnel unanimously support a resolution (outlining the Premier's proposal.

Brig.-Gen. G. A. Hornby of Lethbridge, Alta., read to meetings in Williams Lake and Quesnel a letter from Premier Pattullo containing the migration conference proposal.

Sir Henry F. Croft President

The suggestion was endorsed by Sir Henry Page Croft, British parliamentarian touring interior British Columbia to study possibilities of British migration to the Province, and by Premier Pattullo. Delegation, British shipowner from Newcastle-on-Tyne, Brig.Gen. Hornby of Lethbridge, Alta., and British Columbia legislature.

Sir Henry Pattullo proposal. Sir Henry said:

"Under the aegis of the corporation which might be created under the plan so well suggested by the Premier of British Columbia, Columbia, a policy might well be worked out on a sufficient not only for British Columbia but throughout the whole empire.

Desire For Co-operation

"Give us the mandate to go back to Great Britain to say that there is a desire for co-operation in settlement in suitable areas, that there is no wall between us, that we may go forward unitedly to our great destiny."

"Build your ports in Canada and build trade with them" said Mr. Page Croft.

He loaded the first ships at Port Churchill eight years ago with wheat, and only one who says that Port Churchill will not in course of time become one of the world's great ports, does not know what he is talking about."

Settlement Facilitated

"We in the British House of Commons look upon Canada as a great sovereign and sovereign power," said Sir Henry.

"We look upon its empire settlement that the governments of the British commonwealth may get together in an orderly fashion so that empire migration may be guided in the best possible manner.

Buyers Requested To Speak Louder When Giving Bids

Buyers competing with the Marmora Creamery Board have all the hum of traffic and batering on the open market just outside the room of the hall window in the council room of the city hall at the Saturday morning session of the Belleville Cheese Board, were requested by Secretary Eugene Leeder when calling numbers of chosen factories, on Saturday morning last.

"Let's have a bit of in-the-back rows" was the general plaint of buyers, and the request was heeded back by the open windows.

Previously it was suggested that the secretary, Fred Mallory, be equipped with a second board operator, which he mark selections. The difficulty of keeping both a board operator and secretary on a board was pointed out by the secretary.

"On other boards they have an assistant to do this work of chalking up selections," informed Mr. W. B. McCreary, buyer.

"For years we have been carrying on that system without any assistant needed. All we have to do is speak a little louder," stated Mr. McCreary, "and the words to action on his first selective bid, which was promptly and equally as loud by the secretary.

UNITED VETERANS DECORATE GRAVES OF 300 COMRADES

Simple Yet Impressive Ceremony Attended by Many

3 BANDS PRESENT

Belleville's beautiful cemetery, its green slopes drenched in an August sunlight tempered with cool breezes from the nearby Bay of Quinte was the scene of simple but impressive ceremonies yesterday afternoon as bereted and medalled veterans of the Great War, augmented by a large number of civilians paid tribute to the memory of their comrades who gave their lives for their land and country, and who now lie in their last resting places in the soil of the land for which they gave their all.

Shadows of tall trees fell athwart green, well-kept graves in hallowed ground as the red, blue and green berets of the ex-service men moved silently among the monuments, reverently placing beautiful bouquets of colorful gladioli and other flowers, the colors of which were enhanced by the miniature Canadian flags that fluttered bravely over the last resting places of the veterans.

While pressed, khaki clad members of the Canadian Legion Women's Auxiliary did a similar duty, while small groups of civilians paused silently along the rows of graves, reverently paying tribute to the memories of loved ones long departed.

Over 300 Graves Decorated

The graves of three hundred veterans of this district were decorated as were those of nineteen Roman Catholic heroes who lie in adjacent St. James Cemetery. A tiny American flag fluttered at its stone and bars with the red, white and blue of the Union Jack over the grave of a young sister of the American Army who lies buried in this Canadian cemetery.

Previous to the decoration of the graves, a brief but impressive service was held in front of the mausoleum which was conducted by Major the Rev. Beachamp Payne, chaplain of the Argyll Light Infantry (Militia). Lined in front of the officiating minister in colorful array was a square of veterans, the Belleville Municipal Band and members of the joint Kingston and Belleville Citadel Corps of the Salvation Army.

Furnishing a dark background against the color of the veterans, bandsmen and the various flags, stood the large crowd of civilians. Old familiar hymns rang out in the afternoon sunlight, the accompaniment of the splendid music of the Salvation Army band.

A Simple Ceremony

Then the Silence. Whispering breezes sifting through the trees while plaintive birds sang a soft sweltering stood in bareheaded reverence. In the distance the hum of pulsway broke the restful quietude. Then from the golden throat of a bugle the plaintive notes of "Last Post" rang out in the silence. Veterans sniffed, then straightened.

The Union Jack drooped its colors in tribute to departed heroes. A bugle sounded the "Reveille" and living in the lively notes of Reveille sounded. Then the Silence again. Its folds proudly, and snapped them in the breeze. The National Anthem rang out in fitting culmination to a ceremony that was beautiful to the point of sadness.

Held under the auspices of the Army and Navy Veterans, Belleville Br., Belleville Branch, the parade of Veterans and Women's Auxiliary moved off from the Armouries shortly after two o'clock. Headed by the Municipal Band and under the baton of Lieut. Fred Hagerman, Albert College and Collegiate where Veterans and bandsmen were conveyed to the cemetery in motor cars. Floral tributes of beautiful flowers, donated by various residents and organizations for the occasion purposes was one of the highlights of the day. Representing the Argyll Light Infantry were Lieut.-Col. E. A. Geen, and Major W. Alford. Colonel W. N. Ponton was an interested member of the large audience and renewed many old acquaintances among the ex-service men.

Thanks Given

Members of the Decorating Committee of the Army and Navy Veterans included Messrs. Leo Bellinger, W. Ford, J. Cardiff and Fred Madden. Officers and members of the organization gratefully wish to acknowledge Thomas of the Belleville cemetery, for his splendid work in so far the care of the lots of veterans and his assistance freely given prior to and during the Decoration Day services.

They were also greatly appreciative of the splendid assistance given by the members of the Canadian Legion Women's Auxiliary, who worked tirelessly during the morning hours decorating and preparing the large number of floral tributes for distribution in the cemetery.

As if loath to leave the beautiful setting that the cemetery affords, the large crowd lingered on the grounds, listening to the splendid music played by the united Salvation Army bands.

Soft, sacred music in keeping with the hallowed surroundings was played by these fine musicians in various parts of the cemetery.

Representatives of the Belleville Fire Department were noted decorating the graves of former members of the fire brigades of the city, with beautiful flowers.

Far West Farmers Expect Good Crop

Farmers of the Alberta foothills viewing the best crops seen in the shadow of Canada's majestic Rockies, in nineteen years, are still touching figurative wood, according to a letter received from Mrs. William Dawson of Owendale, Alberta, by Mrs. Ernest Martin, Church Street, Belleville, a sister.

For, the letter states, "We have all prospects of a wonderful harvest. Our wheat fields are a picture, but the season is somewhat late, and while districts around us have suffered from hail, we are still in danger of an early frost. However, it is the best-looking crop we have had since we came here nineteen years ago. The gardens heresbouts are lovely, and there is an abundance of potatoes."

"May has been an excellent crop," the letter continues, "and for the first time in years we will not have to worry about winter feed for our cattle. We expect to harvest our wheat between August 20th and 30th."

Mrs. Dawson, is running her three hundred and twenty-acre ranch in the Alberta foothills with the aid of her two teen-aged sons and a friend man, Mr. Dawson, died two years ago, and left the little family with the ranch on their hands. But Mrs. Dawson, undaunted by crop failures for the past decade, bravely carried on with the help of her sons and this year, providing frost does not intervene will harvest the first good crop, as she says, in nineteen years;

Friendly Squabble Officer is Told

"What if I did break two plates over his head, he is still the finest man I know when he is not drinking," an irate wife told city police officers on Saturday night, when they entered her home after being called by neighbors to stop the "war" that was going on in the house.

On the floor of the room lay the shattered remnants of two plates that friend wife had unceremoniously dropped over friend hubby's head during the family altercation. Nearby sat the "cling of the Household" tenderly rubbing a rapidly swelling bump, evidence of his recent invocation.

"There's no trouble here, he told the officers. "We were having a friendly squabble, that's all." Noticing the officers' eyes on the fragments of china that littered the floor, he smiled, "Guess we eat off the table tomorrow."

Issuing a stern warning to the effect that recultion of the noise would result in drastic consequences for all concerned, the officers left, after ascertaining that peace had once more descended on the little home.

BELLEVILLE PUBLIC UTILITIES

Hiking Club Buys Blankets In This City

Belleville shops have a wide reputation for fair dealing and honest merchandise.

That is why forty-seven members of the Black Hawk Hiking Club, of the tri-cities of Rock Island and Moline, Illinois, from Davenport, Iowa, which club was founded back in the year 1926, deferred their purchases of woolen Hudson Bay blankets, Hudson Bay machines and other typical Canadian products until they reached Belleville.

Camping in Belleville at the city tourist camp on East Dundas Street, during a brief rest enroute to the Gaspe Peninsula, the club members invaded local stores on Saturday afternoon and evening, leaving behind them an estimated $600 in purchases of blankets and other articles.

"We wanted to wait until we got to Belleville, because we heard we could get better goods and bargains here," stated one member of the well-known club.

Grocery stores, meat stores and other shops all felt the benefits of the buying splurge by visitors. One uptown meat store was completely cleaned out early in the afternoon. A hurried call for more supplies was put in by the manager.

Though on a hiking tour of Canada, which tour commenced in the tri-cities on August 11th last, the Canadian trip is the three large trucks. During stop overs in favored localities, members explore the territory on foot. The present trip is the nineteenth annual one enjoyed by club members. They sleep and cook in the open, using bed rolls and small portable kitchens.

After their trip to the Gaspe Peninsula, the party will return to the United States by way of New Brunswick, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York and Ohio.

We're having the time of our lives," members stated on Saturday evening, "and in two of the best camps we have ever stopped at, and the service is the best we have seen so far."

Dairy Graders Given Instructions in Cheese Grading

Dominion dairy graders must in future refuse to grade any cheese in boxes which are not stamped legibly with vat or registered numbers, they have been instructed in a letter received today by W. E. J. Irwin, Dominion dairy grader of the local office from Mr. J. F. Singleton, Associate Director of Marketing Service, Dairy Products Division.

"All graders will in future be held strictly responsible for the observance of these instructions," Mr. Singleton further warned.

In his communication the Associate Director pointed out: "Your attention has been on many occasions drawn to Mr. Penrose's necessity of seeing that boxes containing cheese tendered for grading are clearly marked, and this applies particularly to registered numbers and vat numbers since the type used for these is not large. We are from time to time receiving from the United Kingdom comments or complaints regarding Canadian cheese, and too frequently we get such reports with a notation that the registered number or vat number was illegible.

"During my own visits to the United Kingdom there were many occasions on which it was impossible to identify the registered numbers or vat numbers appearing on the boxes containing Canadian cheese. Recently I have seen in Canada, boxes containing cheese tendered for grading, on which the registered number were illegible. In some cases not all the figures entering into the registered number were illegible, but if only one figure is illegible it is impossible to identify the factory or association by other marks on the box marking.

"Apparently this matter has not been receiving sufficient attention from graders, and in future all graders handling cheese should examine the markings of the lot tendered for grading, and reject the boxes tendered for grading. If the marking is illegible, the cheese will in future be rejected. The licence are marked in a manner so as to be legible at all times. All graders will in future, be held strictly responsible for this observance."

Better Demand for Graded Eggs

Toronto, Aug. 15—Graded eggs strengthened slightly on the Toronto produce market yesterday, while butter and cheese held nominally unchanged.

With Montreal taking on supplies at advanced rates, the trend was for higher prices on the egg market. Top grades in the graded section did show some improvement. Receipts were still light, and a pickup in demand evoked a moral ready clearance in offerings. Graded shipments moved at 26½c for grade A-large, 25 1-2c for medium, 22c for B's and 21c for C grades.

Trading generally showed a standstill on the butter market, and prices were quoted nominally unchanged. Receipts were not excessive throughout the week, and the small buying kept offerings moving. As a result the market was held in fair shape for the week end. Ontario creamery solids were offered at 23 1-4c to 23½c for No. 1 grades, 22 1-2c to 23 1-4c for 92 score and 21 c to 22c for 97 test. Quebec point reported sales on the first-grade product at 23c, but this was not general. Asking prices in the range of 23½c to 23 3-4c appeared necessary for Western make. Printed traded in retail channels at the previous quotations of 26c to 26½c for top grades and 24c to 25c to 26 3-4c for 36 score.

Trading was withdrawn from the cheese market apparently until after the results of the weekly cheese meetings have been revealed. Dealings were confined to a few small large parafined was offered to the wholesale trade at 14 1-4c to 14½c, 14 1-2c to 14 3-4c and 15c for triplets at 14 3-4c to 16c.

Montreal, Aug. 15 (CP)—Butter prices dropped sharply this week on open produce markets, according to Dominion Department of Agriculture weekly bulletin, 1c to 1½c, in view of both the increasing production surplus and the weakening London market. Potatoes also were off, easing 10c to 15c. Cheese markets, however, held steady, while increased demand for eggs, resulting from the cooler weather, will result in higher egg prices a little later.

Creamery butter prints to retail dealers ranged from 30c to 35½c a pound for cartons and solids for 34 1-2c to 35c. Western butter was offered at 23 3-4c. Quebec whitefast pasturized butter price to jobbers for No. 1 was 30c to 30½c, and No. 2, 29c.

Cheese sold at 14 1-4c a pound for No. 1 Ontario white, 14 1-4c for Ontario colored, 13 3-4c for Quebec white and 13 3-4c to 13 7-8c for Quebec colored. Receipts were 258 boxes, including 3,206 for export.

Graded egg shipments in cartons or less sold at 28c a dozen for A-large, 26½c for A-medium, 24c for B and 21 1-3c to 22c for C. Receipts: 8,040 cases.

GIRL ATTACKED BY UNKNOWN MAN RETURNING HOME

Adhesive Tape Placed Over Glasses Worn by Miss Sherring

Returning home from a midnight cinema, a Belleville domestic, was criminally assaulted by an unknown male assailant near the corner of Bridge and Dundas Streets shortly before 3.00 a.m. today. The assailant attempted to seal the girl's mouth by placing a large strip of adhesive tape across her face, but the courageous girl bravely repulsed her assailant, although badly bruised about the face and body during the struggle.

Loud screams, that pierced the early-morning air, have since the many residents residing near the scene of the attack and following which police were notified. The girl gave her name as Miss Eva Sherring, domestic employed at 17 Charles St. The girl was in a nervous state and quite emotional when rescued.

"I was returning home from attending the midnight show, when I heard some person approaching from behind me. I neared the John Street intersection, and was turning easterly on Bridge St. Suddenly the man ran up behind me and I felt a sped something over my face. I struggled as he dragged me to the boulevard and towards an alley, where he continued to try and place something over my mouth, but I screamed for help and later gained my freedom. The man got away but I had a good look at him and feel sure I could identify him if I ever saw him again" the nervously-affected girl assured the police.

Glasses are Found

Later Constables Hagerman and Taylor found the girl's eye glasses in the nearby alleyway. They were completely covered with the small strips of adhesive tape, presumably to be employed by the girl's assailant in clapping over the girl's mouth to keep her from screaming but as she was attacking, the glasses were broken, but held together by the adhesive tape, when found by the police.

Residents, who later stated they heard a woman scream for help crying "Help, police, murder help", immediately mobilized the police, several residents hastily dressing and going to the scene of the disturbance. Miss Sherring was in very noticeable state of nervousness and verging on a state of hysteria upon the arrival of police and citizens.

Police authorities have since thoroughly searched as well as all manner of persons in the district, but up to the time of going to press, no arrests had been effected.

Rested at Station

Miss Sherring, after having rested at the police station, later told the police she had suspected nothing when the man jumped upon her from behind. "I immediately struggled and although he succeeded in getting into an alleyway west of John St., where we fell to the ground, I managed to release myself somewhat, but could not see, as there was something over my eyes. When my glasses fell off I got a good look at the man, just before he turned to run away," Miss Sherring stated. "Depending on her limbs and arms revealed in the moonlight. When arrested on the ground with her assailant.

Alert residents in that vicinity immediately notified police of the attack, Constables Thomson and Taylor, assisted by Constable Jerome of the O.N.R. police, all under Sergeant Arthur Booth, searched the city well, but found no trace of the assailant. Reports to police several known suspects, who were seen loitering about early this morning but all failed to be questioned before night," added Sergeant Booth this morning.

Police Blotter

While riding his bicycle down West Bridge Street hill on Saturday afternoon, Geo. S. Dunbar received sustained minor injuries, when the bicycle struck a motor car driven by P. W. Robin, Brown Attorney Dunnan, K.C.

Dunbar, who has been attending the Collegiate Institute, was thrown from the bicycle and struck the car. "I tried to apply the brakes but succeeded only in skidding and the car, I guess I was going too fast," young Dunbar stated to investigating police.

Local police were called to Highland Ave., where speeding bicycle rides by hitch-hiking were reported to be causing a disturbance. They were told by some that "this practice of standing at the top of Highland Ave and soliciting rides from passing motorists must be discontinued. It is not only against the laws of the H.T.A., but a dangerous practice which annoys peaceful residents" stated Acting Chief Arthur Harman in warning, this morning.

"FICTIONS" CONTENTS A BROWN BEAR

Shakespeare, Ont., Aug. 15 — (CP)—A bear was taken from a tra'sway baggage car here that upsetted persons on the platform. It was labeled "hands off—vicious." It contained a partly grown brown bear, which had been shipped from Algonquin Park.

BRIDGE OPENING GALA OCCASION

The opening of the International Bridge that spans the St. Lawrence River from Ivy Lea, near Cananoque on the Canadian side and Collins Landing on the American side, that is officially scheduled to take place on Thursday of this week in event of international importance to our American cousins, according to Pte Chief William Lynch just returned from a vacation in Watertown, New York, and speaking from the American viewpoint.

The people over there are agog with excitement as the great day approaches," the Chief stated this morning. Elaborate preparations have been made for the accommodation of between sixty and seventy thousand people expected to attend the ceremonies that will see President Roosevelt of the United States and Prime Minister Mackenzie King of Canada, snip the ribbons that will throw open this connecting link between two great countries."

Parking for 12,000 Vehicles

Parking space that will provide for 12,000 motorized vehicles has been arranged for on both sides of the river. Farms and vacant lots adjacent to the approaches of the great span, as well as on both Canadian and American side have been rented and set aside for the accommodation of the thousands of motors.

Temporary hospitals have been erected with doctors and nurses from Kingston General Hospital in attendance on the Canadian bank of the river and members of the staff of the Watertown Hospital doing similar duty on the American side, the chief stated.

High Canadian and American dignitaries will attend the function; governors of neighboring States, mayors of numerous cities from both sides of the river will attend.

Ten thousand cards, a holiday has been declared in the surrounding districts, will be given over carry stickers and cards announcing the festure, and date of the opening ceremonies. Tickets are available at every roadside station. The people over there are in great concern about the thing, Pte Chief Lynch smiled.

However, we take your word about not knowing the bylaw and are letting you go."

Smiled Their Thanks

And the appreciative "prisoners" smiling their thanks hurried from the station. As one said: "These Belleville policemen are all right. In my town, it wouldn't matter if you came from Timbuctoo, if you didn't have the money to pay your fine. It would be bread and water for 30 days."

While all who were given a ticket for breach of the parking bylaws were let go with a gentle but firm warning, repetitions will result in fine, police officers stated last Saturday night.

"These bylaws are going to be enforced from now on," Sergeant Booth stated. "And we wish to draw to the attention of the motoring public the fact, that Campbell Street and Victoria Avenue as far as Pinnacle Street are now one-hour parking areas, is Coleman Street. Any further infractions will result in fines. And we have a memory for faces here," the sergeant smiled.

POLICE COURT

Charges of the theft of scrap metal were today preferred against three Belleville juveniles following investigations conducted by Plainclothesman Fred Izard. The youths are charged with the theft of brass from the Pruit Machinery Company and lead from the Belleville Iron & Steel Smith Hardware. Their cases will be presented in special Juvenile Court to be held before Magistrate F. J. Butler, K.C., this week.

The trio of teen-aged boys to have been held over the week-end on questioning by police, were suspended sentence at the present time, Acting Chief Arthur Harman revealed this morning. Until the time of the hearing the lads were given into the custody of their parents, through Inspector T. D. Ruston of the Children's Aid Society.

Today in local police court held before Magistrate Butler, Dalton Bell, Whitby, appeared charged with obtaining money under a false pretence. Bell pleaded not guilty. "Restitution has been made in this case," the magistrate declared man.

This fact makes no difference. This is a criminal case and will be dealt with as such. This matter of using the mails for purposes of obtaining money must be discontinued. This is a criminal offence and will be dealt with as such," said Mr. Donnan as a week's enlargement was granted. Bell was admitted bail bail of $1,000.00.

Watt, elderly transient who gave Windsor as his home address, was given 30 minutes to get out of the city.

"This man set a fire in a woods in Thurlow Township, a dangerous thing to do this time of the year, but we don't want him around here," Brown Attorney Donnan, K.C. declared.

"There is no room at the jail, so you had better get out of the city as quickly as you can," warned Police Sergeant Booth as Watt heeded the warning.

A domestic case concluded the morning's docket.

Referring to Germany's "new military concepts," D'Ormesson added:

"Who would think that only yesterday spoke of a 'lightning war'? We have no such idea. A European war would be an extremely long one and the French and British know it. Without saying so overtly, the Reich perhaps is aware of this fact."

Confidentedness of Czechs

In France, the attitude of nothing of the Czechoslovaks in regard to the German move is confidentedness, D'Ormaro went on. The Czechoslovaks are maintaining a most vigilant attitude in the frontier zone, although

The local merchant is the connecting link between producer and consumer.

His contact with the buying public is direct, intimate and personal. He knows his customers, their likes and dislikes; why they buy one product and refuse another; why one brand sells more rapidly than others.

It may be assumed, therefore, the retail merchant knows the best way to produce immediate results in selling, and it is significant that his basic advertising medium is the local daily newspaper.

In the first four months of this year the Canadian daily newspapers carried more than 40,000,000 lines of retail advertising—striking evidence of nationwide confidence in the value of the daily newspapers in Canada, as productive advertising media.

CLINIC FOR POLICE WHO WORRY

In New York City they have a clinic for those policemen who have real worries. One would not expect them to worry much, for used to facing trouble and emergencies, one would hardly expect them to become neurotic. Yet in a month's operation, 150 cases have been dealt with.

A survey of the clinic shows that the policemen's troubles in New York City are the same troubles of the average citizen, some of specific causes being cited:

Carrying life insurance with a premium cost beyond income allowance; buying furniture, clothing, jewelry, automobiles etc., on credit beyond what income will permit; helping needy relatives each month; acting as endorser or co-maker for friends or relatives who fail to repay the loans; gambling in the hope of paying off debts; buying too expensive a home; running up large doctor's bills instead of first seeking the advice of the District Surgeon; entertaining beyond means, and keeping children in private schools.

In psychic cases, it was said, the clinic will have the assistance of Dr. Menas S. Gregory, Dr. C. J. Lombardo, and other specialists. In financial problems, the organization may make arrangements with the Municipal Credit Union or other organizations to give assistance.

The Commissioner expressed hope that the clinic would permit the morale of the department, "at a high standard today," to be lifted even higher.

Surely it is a good sign when a patrolman Wm. McDonald, who has studied psychology will act as psychiatrist to help his associates who have problems.

THE DANUBIAN FRONT

"Better late than never," the steps being taken in Paris and London to facilitate loans and finance trade among the Balkan States have come to pass with the decided improvement in the atmosphere along the lower Danube," says the New York Times. "In a Summer when the world seems blanketed by a "Bermuda high" and most of the international weather prophets predict storms, this is the one area where the temperature drops towards normal. The old "cockpit" is still a kind of concentration camp for all the problems that disturb Europe, but while the process of division goes on as Mediterranean goes on elsewhere, in the Balkans the policy of appeasement seems actually to be in process of realization.

"For the moment Bulgaria is the focal point of this new and important development. More than a year ago the Government at Sofia signed a pact of perpetual peace with Yugoslavia which ended the conflict between the two countries over Macedonia and removed from the domain which has caused not only local but general wars then the Yugoslav Prime Minister, M. Stoyadinovitch, has been active in promoting the Salonika Agreement, signed a fortnight ago, by which Bulgaria obtains the consent of her neighbors to rearm. The significance of this peaceful revision of the Treaty of Neuilly, made by regional negotiations without benefit of Geneva or the Great Powers, has received less emphasis than it merits. When it is noted that the only other revision by peaceful persuasion was achieved by Turkey, in winning the right to fortify the Dardenelles, it looks as if the Balkan States have reason to claim that they are less backward than the big nations of the West.

"The sequel proves that such virtue is not its own reward. Turkey has received a loan from England to finance her rearmament program, and Bulgaria is is paying for her legalized munitions with a loan from French and British bankers are advancing money for railway reconstruction and public works. Thus Paris and London are taking belated steps to break the vicious circle that makes the economic misery of the States of Southeastern Europe dependent on barter arrangements with Germany. Bulgaria, forced by lack of other markets to sell more than half her produce in exchange for German goods, is the most dependent, but all Balkan countries are obliged to look to the Reich for most of their foreign trade. The effort beginning to be made to help them to trade with one another and the rest of the world represents the first practical check to the "bloodless invasion." It recognizes that no nation can be politically independent which is economically dependent on one power. It is equally certain that no nation will live on barter, a system highly unpopular wherever it is in force, when it is offered any other means of trade.

THE CLIMATE

We sing of the Polar bear, fearless and bold,
He never feels hot and he never feels cold,
Because where he lives summer never occurs,
And the rest of the year he wears plenty of furs.
Too-ra-lee, Too-ra-lay,
And the rest of the year he wears plenty of furs.
Too-ra-lee, Too-ra-lay,
And the rest of the year he wears plenty of furs.

The Crocodile lives in the tropical belt,
And neither the cold nor the heat ever felt,
Because in the winter his summers begin,
And the rest of the year he wears crocodile skin.
Too-ra-lee, Too-ra-lay,
And the rest of the year he wears crocodile skin.
Too-ra-lee, Too-ra-lay,
And the rest of the year he wears crocodile skin.

Now we poor unfortunates live in a clime
That calls for at least three full suits at a time;
A thick one and thin one for days cold and hot,
And a madium weight for the days that are not.
Too-ra-lee, Too-ra-lay,
And a madium weight for the days that are not.
Too-ra-lee, Too-ra-lay,
And a madium weight for the days that are not.

A DOG ON THE ROAD—a freight truck—truck turns out to avoid dog, collides with motor car—one dead, several injured. It takes several years of cleaning, and firing a locomotive, and hard examinations before one is permitted to drive the machine—and that has rails to keep it steady and straight. Folks learn to drive a motor car in jig time and get a permit right off the bat to take their place in the congested traffic on the highways. Seems if there should be a mental examination of some kind for most drivers, and careful supervision as to how and when they drive for the first few weeks.

AT THE CORNER GROCERY THE TALK GOT ROUND TO THE UMBRELLA which it has been proposed to erect on the market to shelter folks who come to market from the rain, when it rains market day. Said the old Settler: "I've been coming to Belleville market a matter of forty years or more and that umbrella has been in the air ever since I began attending the market. Seems as tho' from what I've heard that the City Hall building will soon have rooms to rent, now that the gas and water and electric light business has been transferred to Hydro building. Why not transplant the rest and turn the building over for market purposes—a real market, with a few alterations." Sounds like a good idea, at that.

BELLEVILLE ADVANCES TOWARD CITY MANAGERSHIP STEADILY despite the opposition of politicians of high and low degree. With the electric light and water department combined with the water and gas departments, now functioning under a business manager, and really going to town in a big way as a going concern on a purely business basis, there is not much left of city departments to turn over to make it unanimous. When that happens the city business can all be concentrated in the Hydro building and the present civic headquarters turned over for market purposes—including the police station as has been suggested.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton M.D.

Infection Elsewhere May Cause Ear Infection and Deafness

There are a number of causes of vertigo or dizziness; some are due to disturbances in brain and spinal cord, others to the liver and disturbances of digestion, and others to disturbance of the ear. In a series of 100 cases of vertigo, 67 or about 2 in every 3 cases, were due to some disturbance of the ear.

Dr. A. J. Wright in the Journal of Laryngology (throat) and Otology (ear), discusses seventy-three cases of dizziness, due to suppuration (inflammation with pus formation) of the middle ear. The vertigo or dizziness does not result from disease in the middle ear but in the labyrinth or bony ear system of the inner ear. Focal infection from some other part of the body, is the most frequent and frequently other disturbances or inflammations are also present, especially rheumatic iritis—inflamation of the colored part of the eye.

All patients with dizziness due to the ear condition which the infection from another part of the body was removed, are now quite completely free of dizziness. Dr. Wright believes that cases of the labyrinth type of dizziness with deafness be regarded as of unknown or doubtful cause can be grouped together as belonging to a simple disease—focal labyrinthitis—or, in other words, inflammation of the labyrinth due to poison from another part of the body. That the verdict of doctors in the case of the infection is shown by the presence in every case of a focus of infection and is shown to even a greater degree by the stopping and even cure of the disease when the infection is removed.

The thought here is that instead of just being satisfied to treat and correct the ear condition, the other parts of the body should be looked during the poison which in turn is disturbing the middle ear should be sought diligently. Dr. Wright states that the eye infection—iritis—is often the cause; other physicians will be of the opinion that an infection of the sinuses, of the intestine, and of the lower part of the body are often the cause also.

This information will help some infection in the body is causing the ear infection, and the ear infection is the disturbing factor. It is a matter interest to sufferers with vertigo.

Rumors Requisitioned

Rumors current among the rural population said the Reich had requisitioned by the military authorities for the duration of the crisis all Munich told of automobiles and trucks being requisitioned.

Many of the cars are being planned to depend chiefly upon motor vehicles for the supply of the population, trying to avoid commandeering of railways and to facilitate movement on a war-time basis in unfamiliar territory.

Hitler's conference was that the manoeuvres were to be close to the frontier—that the German people might provoke a conflict with Czechoslovakia. Relations of the two nations have been strained by Nazi sympathy for the autonomy demands of the Sudeten German minority in Czechoslovakia).

Earlier Training

Today's manoeuvres were preliminary to so-called district war games which will be staged in Germany early every section of the country starting about Sept. 1. The purpose of getting the two weeks' earlier training to acquaint them with new type weapons.

In the district games there will be not more than two divisions in any one section, each of which will go through a series of sham battles.

The Boersenzeitung, an authority on German military technique, has explained that the object of war games was chosen in preference to one mass army to test the efficacy of forces fighting in wartime conditions and of the services behind the lines.

Does YOUR System Make Excess Acid?

Acid Indigestion, Colds, Headaches, Bilious Attacks, Constipation often START THIS WAY

Some people are what are known as acid-makers. They can't help it—and often they don't know it. The results of an excess of acid may come just like ordinary stomach trouble — but they don't be put right by ordinary stomach remedies Excess acid may be the reason why you wake up fat, sour, bleary-eyed, bilious — and the reason why fierce purgatives only leave you in the grip of a weakening habit and the same old symptoms.

But there's one thing that said can't face. That's the neutralizing power of Vange Salts, the alkaline remedy with the natural mineral spa action. A teaspoonful in warm water surges through your system just like the medicinal spring water far away in England where Vange Salts come from. Excess acid is neutralized quickly, painlessly. Your blood is purified of poisons. Your sore stomach walls are soothed. And that mass of hard, poisonous waste matter lying in your intestines is softened gently, naturally, and passed out of your body. Can you feel how good! It's marvellous! But the most marvellous thing is that Vange Salts are only 60 cents a tin! At druggists everywhere—but if you're wise, on your bathroom shelf tonight!

Library Corner

by
K. G.

A book appropriate to this season when Kingston is celebrating its bicentennial has been written by C. R. Glover and D. D. Calvin in their volume 'A Corner of Empire". It is true that the history of the Empire is to be found in the history of its parts and "the old Ontario strand" has a history as rich as any part of the Dominion. Worked into the story is the story of the part passed in the incidents that make up the every day life of the district, swimming, fishing, boating, then that life taken in the larger experience of the river, the lakes, the community life of this small unit of the Empire. Three empires fought for control of the continent, the American and British, but it survived as the King's Town of the United Empire Loyalists, as well as a vivid picture of social history we see also the political and educational significance of such men as Macdonald, Mowat, Grant and Watson. The author of this book is a book that will stir up many memories for Ontario readers.

One sore morning in 1925, Dorothy Childs Hogner and her artist husband started out from New York City, uninhibited and unwanted scenery. They talked with real prospectors, observed vegetation, fauna and irrigation farming. The result is a book outstanding for its sincerity and alertness. The fine illustrations of Nils Hogner bring out clearly the scene of the petrified forest", the American desert.

Janet Riesenfeld, young American dancer, set out for Madrid in July of 1936 to fulfill a dancing engagement and to meet a young Spaniard whom she had planned to wed and marry. She missed the last train from Paris and succeeded after some delay in reaching Barcelona in the guise of a newspaper correspondent. Her book "Dancer in Madrid" is concerned with experiences and observations during six months of siege. The nightmarish horror of civil war is brought home to the reader.

"The Face of France" by Harry J. Greenwall had the honour of winning the French prize as the best book recently written about France by a foreigner. Unlike the usual guide book, this volume is more concerned with the people, their food, their way of life and the customs of the various provinces than with the architectural beauties. The tour of France extends through four seasons and covers almost every inch of the country. We may, with the author, abandon all modern modes of travel and enter on foot old towns which sleep peacefully in the hills. Their grandfathers were there before we passed this way, and their grandchildren will be there long after we have passed on. This is the true face of France".

The Barlow car, driven by Maurice Barlow, approached the brow of a hill on the highway and had just passed the rise when they noticed the Dekoon car practically on top of them on the left hand side of the highway. In an effort to avoid the accident the Dekoon car crashed head-on into the other one, police stated.

Traffic Officer Hatch stated that charges were pending.

Clinton Barlow is employed as a chemist at Deloro and is a son of Mr. George Barlow, Victoria Ave., Belleville.

Dr. G. S. Cronk, who attended the injured in hospital here, performed operations on Pelton and Clinton Barlow yesterday afternoon. He stated that while they were in no danger their condition was serious. Mrs. Barlow and Peter Dekoon were not injured as seriously as at first supposed and will be sent to their homes today.

HIGHWAY WORKER

Nearing the man, Cleary, travelling east, noticed him suddenly step back in the road directly in the path of his car. He applied his brakes but not in time to avoid striking Jackson.

Said Marte Visible

Skid marks for a distance of sixty-nine feet were visible on the highway west of the place where the accident occurred, Constable Dymond stated.

Jackson was knocked down by the force of the impact, rolled under the car and dragged for some distance before the car was stopped and he was extricated from beneath the vehicle. He showed little signs of external injuries when treated by Dr. Crawford at the roadside.

Signs posted along the side of the highway at this point warn motorists to drive slowly, as loose gravel is being laid down. The signs are marked with a red flag.

Charges against Cleary are pending the outcome of the inquest being held on Wednesday.

Jackson, who resided in Marmora, leaves a wife and a large family, and had been employed by the Department of Highways on that part of No. 7 Highway for some time.

Buddy Stroop, Panama Canal Zone champion, finished third.

Seven national champions lined up for the international elimination heats. These included Canada, South Africa, Australia, Hawaii, United States and the Panama Canal Zone, Wilson driving a thrilling race, was as cool as the proverbial cucumber and stayed off the Australian and Hawaiin threats to qualify for the World's Championship event.

Extremely Popular

The dark-eyed little Canadian was extremely popular with the large crowd, and many people other than his fellow Canadians were cheering for him to come through. He drove a splendid race and received many verbal bouquets from his fellow drivers, officials and others who were attracted by his gentlemanly behaviour and fine deportment.

Wilson was awarded a huge silver trophy emblematic of his flashing position, given by Chevrolet, a wrist watch, numerous other prizes and diplomas.

The International Winner

Bobby Berger, the winner had a few minutes previously defeated Dicky Ballard, Little Falls, New York, brother of the 1937 International champion, and Stanley Hartshorn, Garden, Mass., in a photo finish to win the United States championship in a driving that drew the cream of soap box drivers from the United States and Toronto cities of the United States.

Over one hundred thousand wildly cheering people from all parts of the continent crowded the new historic Derby Downs yesterday for what is now conceded to be the most outstanding amateur sports event on the continent. One hundred and thirteen city champions from all states of the union and their pilots journeyed to Derby for days previous to the race. High officials of the Chevrolet Division of the General Motors Corporation, originators of this unique event, notables from all branches of the world of sport, speed champions, motion picture stars and state and Federal dignitaries made up the distinguished throng that converged on this Ohio city to witness the finish of the 1936 edition the Soap Box Derby honors and the many valuable prizes that go with them.

Thousands of automobiles, bearing the plates of every political points of the continent, from Canada to the Panama Canal Zone, crammed the parking facilities for miles near the track to capacity. Hotels were filled to the rafters for days before the race.

Rush For Seats

Then came the day of the race. People rushed to get seats. One of the most colorful parades, marked by floats that outdid any ever seen in these hamlets, winds from all parts of the country marched in front of the reviewing stand and then that culminated in the selection of a United States champion got under way. To the deafening roaring of thousands of throats each car took kept back an over enthusiastic crowd as the various heats got under way. The defending champion's acclaim of their admirers and supporters, the youthful drivers in search of national honors speed down the cement track to victory on defeat.

Then as the field gradually narrowed down, excitement became intense. Smiling, defeated but not disgraced, showing the spirit of sportsmanship that the very youthfulness in them, youthful drivers to cheer their conquerors to victory. One by one they gracefully passed out of the picture, disappointed, yes, but not to the point or sullenness. They took their defeat like the true sportsmen they are, and vowed to do better another year.

Then the all-important finals for the American title. Three, youths, Bobby Berger, of Omaha, Nebraska, Dicky Ballard, White Plains, New York, brother of Bobby Ballard, last year's International Champion, who was ineligible to compete by reason of his 1937 victory, and Stanley Hartshorn of Garden, Massachusetts, lined up on the ramp to await the whistle that would send them away in quest of national honors and the four years' university course, that awaited the winner. A brand new soap box derby coupe stood waiting to be claimed by the second and third place drivers.

The crowd waited tense. Then a whistle sounded, a green light flashed on. Slowly the advance guard of motorcycle policemen and the official trailer glided down the course. A lever was jerked and the three cars sped down the ramp. In twenty-eight poine seven-four seconds the race was over. But what a finish. Speeding down the incline track, Berger and Ballard fought for the leadership, inches separated them, and they flashed across the line with thousands of spectators at a loss to know who won. In fact, officials themselves had to call in the latest scientific method of deciding winners in close contests, the photo finish, before an official decision could be made.

It was not until the negative had been developed, that Bobby Berger was decided the official United States champion. Bedlam broke loose. Crowds broke through the cordon of police to get the smiling youngster on the back. They broke down the barriers that held them from the track.

Youngster Mobbed

They tore the shirt from his back to carry away as souvenirs. One gentleman wished his helmet and took it away, but sportsmanlike returned it after a few minutes. The track near the finish line was by this time a mass of cheering humanity. Police fought in an effort to clear the way for the International Race. Newsreel men and newspaper photographers held the youngster back. Radio announcers shouted in efforts to be the first to get the smiling happy youngster to their microphones.

It was not until burly policemen finally succeeded in placing a cordon around Berger and his car that he was able to be taken to the starting ramp, where he was scheduled to enter the International Race. Interviewed was Harry Hartz, famous driver of the Indianapolis speedways, the youngster stated that he was extremely happy and prophesied, "O boy, how I will win the International Race."

The broadcast of the races, especially the International affair which Canada's hopes were pinned on, became quite a unique thing but interesting from a Canadian point of view. The announcer devoted approximately fourteen words to this event, and apparently the winner crossed the line before he was aware of the fact.

Many famous notables in sport and other spheres of life were introduced over the microphone as were relatives of the American winner.

PADLOCK ISSUE TO ELECTORS?

New Toronto's Bylaw May be Made Election Question

Toronto, Aug. 13—(CP)—New Toronto's so-called padlock by-law was before the people of that suburban township today as a possible election issue after councillor J. W. Shelley challenged his fellow-councillors to resign and race in election on the question.

Shelley who framed the bylaw, flung his challenge when invited to speak to ratepayers at a meeting called by the West York branch of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation to oppose the by-law. The C.C.F. had planned to test legality of the by-law at the meeting, but a stormy session of New Toronto council Thursday granted the C.C.F. a permit.

Bylaw Attacked

M. J. Coldwell, national chairman of the C.C.F. and C.C.F. members from Rosetown-Biggar, Sask., was one of seven C.C.F. or Trade Union speakers who attacked the bylaw as restricting freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

"I am always ready to transgress the law when that transgress the laws of the people," said John Mitchell, President of the Ontario section of the C.C.F.

Mr. Shelley, when he spoke at the invitation of the chairman, said other members of the council who had voted against giving the C.C.F. a permit "got cold feet" but he was not prepared to "throw up the sponge."

Ban on Public Meetings

He said he had offered his resignation to Mayor Jackson yesterday when the meeting permit was finally granted and challenged Mayor Jackson and the rest of the council "to go to the people on that issue."

"If the people of New Toronto want the by-law, all right," Shelley said. "If they don't let them kick us to hell out of council."

Shelley said he supported the by-law, which bans public meetings unless a permit has been granted, because "certain people tried to stir up industrial strife in New Toronto."

Attorney-General Gordon Conant today said he was not entirely sure the by-law is entirely legal and proper within the municipal act." He advised he did not think a drastic enforcement of the by-law should be attempted until the bylaw had been tested in the courts.

AGENT CHARGES VAST SPY GROUP

Estimates 500,000 Back Nazi Mvement in U. S.

Washington, Aug. 13.—An undercover agent told the United States House of Representatives Committee on "Unamerican activities" today that the Nazi movement in the United States aims to set up "vast spy network" and "powerful sabotage machine" for use in case of war.

These charges came from John C. Metcalfe, committee investigator and former Chicago newspaper man.

Metcalfe, a native of Germany who came to the United States in 1914, told of joining the German American Bund under a German name, and becoming a trusted lieutenant of Fritz Kuhn, National Bund leader.

Under questioning of Chairman Dies (Dem., Texas), Metcalfe estimated that "at least 500,000 persons in this country" are members, supporters, or sympathizers with the Nazi movement.

Metcalfe charged that when the House Committee was appointed Kuhn established spies in the United States to destroy all correspondence that might appear suspicious. This was corroborated by Peter Glaubi, head of the Chicago Bund, who testified he had resigned after sharp differences with Kuhn over certain policies.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. You feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

A mere bowel movement doesn't always get at the cause. You need something that works on the liver to get rid of this bile. Ask your druggist for Carter's Little Pills and get those two pounds of bile flowing freely. They should make the bile flow freely. They do the work of colonic laxatives by getting at the cause. Don't accept substitutes. Insist on Carter's Little Pills. Only 25c.

AVOID ENVY, ANGER FOR BEAUTY'S SAKE

(By HELEN FOLLETT)

EXPERIENCE SHOULD teach a woman the folly of emotional storms; she should be able to read the whole miserable story in her mirror. A breakfast-table battle with the husband will make her look like the "breaking of a hard winter" all day long. Losing patience with the children brings clouds that take the freshness from her face, make her grow old-looking before her time. Jealousy, anger, envy, suspicion—they're all beauty wreckers.

Let your angry passions rise and see what happens. There is a thickening of the pulse, the heart pounds. The skin is cold and moist. In the throat is a choking sensation. Digestive activities cease. After a time the old head begins to thump. Nothing is gained. If emotional sprees continue, much is lost. Hard lines appear on the face, muscles become tense.

Unless a woman can control her emotions, there's no sense following the cash registers of pulchritude beauty cults or flinging money into shops. She can't make headway.

Using a woman is tolerant, sweet and forgiving, she might as well stop chasing beauty rainbows. And rainbows they are, unless she is beautiful in mind and soul.

Opera singers have full chests They fill them full of air; they know how to breathe properly. Lungs are expanded, chest muscles exercised.

You girls who are bawling about flat chests and uncovelopped busts can change the silhouette by drinking in the ozone. Stand tall, hands on hips. See how much air you can force into the lungs. Pull in the abdominal muscles, first the lower ones, then those higher up, until the flesh below the ribs is drawn inward. Exhale slowly.

Ten minutes of breathing exercises every day for a month and you can throw the rouge compact out of the window.

Moth patches on the skin are the result of pigmentary deposits. The character of the skin changes as a woman grows older, and these horrid patches appear to worry her.

If a few come, more will follow. To keep the newcomers away, the cutaneous surface should be kept oiled. A masage cream is the best medium; it offers resistance in massage, movements dig deeper in the skin to tone tissues, revive circulation, strengthen the tiny fibres that are in the skin cells itself.

Watch the placing of the belt. It has much to do with figure proportions. If legs are short, lift the girdle; if the torso is short, drop it.

How one dresses the waist is a subject for thought and consideration.

Face washing is an ordeal for children. They hate the suds and slopping washcloth. But they must bear with it; mama must be adamant. Careless face washing in childhood is responsible for blackheads in the teen age.

Made a little girl or boy of seven or eight has pores dotted with dust. The walls of the pores expand because of deposits of oil and atmospheric filth; in time the texture of the skin coarsens. After the sooty scouring, there should be a rinsing with clear, cold water.

Poems That Live

BLACK SHEEP

From their folded mates they wander far,
Their ways seem harsh and wild;
They follow the beck of a baleful star,
Their paths are dream beguiled.

Yet haply they sought but a wider range,
Some loftier mountain-slope,
And little recked of the country strange
Beyond the gates of hope.

And haply a bell with a luring call
Summoned their feet to tread
Midst the crags and rocks, where the deep pitfall
And the lurking snare are spread.

Maybe, in spite of their tameless days,
Of outcast liberty,
They're sick at heart for the homely ways
Where their gathered brothers be.

And oft at night, when the plains fall dark
And the hills loom large and dim,
For the Shepherd's voice they mutely hark,
And their souls go out to him.

Meanwhile, "Black sheep! black sheep!" we cry,
Safe in the inner fold;
And maybe, they hear, and wonder why,
And marvel, out in the cold.

—Richard Barton (1859).

Mystery is in every fold of a magnificent full-length cape of finest black moire. It has a high, upstanding collar, the front of which, at either side, is faced with hravy gold thread embroidery.

An invitation to an important dance calls for an important frock. This might well be Molyneux's pleated black chiffon, long, slim and straight, its slender lines set off by an enormous garland of big red and white peonies that almost covers the shoulders.

Never out of date is a fine knit frock. A charming model is a two-piece ribbed frock of sand beige silk yarn. The pigskin belt is finished off with loads of fine tassels in multi-colored leather.

Plenty of Floor Coverings.

Floors are growing more dramatic all the time, and yours can be as ingenious and dazzling as you like. You can choose from all manner of woods, from oak, maple, walnut, and teak to ebony and pine. You can select a floor of brick, mosaic, marble terrazzo or tile, rubber or cork, or cement, or metal. There are even floors of glass, if you wish, not to mention the stunning ones possible with linoleum and many other composition materials.

And your choice of colors and designs is almost infinite.

For this reason any remodeling of a home which includes floor refinishing or new floors is quite as exciting as building a new home. The home modernizer can have variety in floors as well as the new home builder. And the results make the effort worth while.

How Colors Affect Folk.

Whether we are aware of it or not, colors play all sorts of tricks on us. They can relax or stimulate, depress or exhilarate; they can flatter us and bring out our good points, or detract from what looks we have. They can even definitely affect our personality and deflate our ego or puncture and deflate it.

If you don't believe this try the simple effect of magenta light at the next party you give in your home. The experiments won't cost you much money, for all you will need are four of five 1,000-watt lamps and some plain holders. Then take some magenta cover-all sides and slip them over the lamps and several them behind or under your furniture. Then switch off all your other illumination and watch results.

This soft magenta glow sets like a grand little pick-me-up and it's guaranteed to stimulate conversation.

Plaids Are Accentuated In New Autumn Suits

Combined With Solid Color in Cape and Jacket Costumes

By LISBETH

After July the fourth fashion experts forget about summer and concentrate on what womankind is going to wear for fall.

We poor mortals are still wearing our summer clothes and even buying a few new ones that we will enjoy the remainder of this season and fondly hope will be good for at least part of next summer.

However, we do give the autumn trends a more than passing glance. We know that playtime is soon over and we go back to our homes, schools, work.

The two clever suits shown here are well worthy of consideration, too, and they are the type that one could use right now if going to the mountains, to northern resorts for August, on a cruise northward where days are often cool and nights always al.

Favorite Combination.

The first one is a favorite combination this season — a solid color skirt and a plaid jacket. It is called a spectator sports suit. The collarless tweed jacket combines plum color with powder blue. It has an interesting yoke treatment accented with a band of the darker shade which is also used to edge the pockets.

The skirt is of light-weight plum-colored wool, and shows an inverted pleat at the center front marked with sawtooth stitchings.

Miss Davis' high-crowned felt hat has a self-colored grosgrain ribbon band edged with powder blue.

For First Fall Days.

For the first brisk days of fall as well as the travel trip, Bette Davis selects the other suit—a cape ensemble, the cape of gray and green herringbone with matching skirt. The jacket is gray and green shadow plaid accented with silver buttons at the front closing.

The pillbox hat shows a quill stuck through the top of the crown, and Miss Davis wears black antelope gloves and shoes.

A full-length Saxony wool coat in plaid is an all-purpose model that is splendid to take on a cruise. These coats are usually roomy enough to wear over a jacket suit, and are mighty useful as well as smart.

The last rose of summer may well be a purchase that can be worn if you go for a cruise or down South next winter. The fabric might well be natural Shantung for it is cool and lovely. It is used for a lovely dress and rounded bolero of pale blue, the dress with a pleated skirt, the lapels of the collarless jacket are saddle stitched, as is the bodice of the dress at the little round collar.

Belle Davis wears cape ensemble for autumn in gray and green herringbone with jacket in gray and green shadow plaid and silver buttons at the front closing.

Oliver Jason Brown* is going to run an

Ad

Let's Watch and See How He Does It!

It's August, it's furniture sale time! And Oliver Jason Brown is going to run an ad. You'll see his ad in the Ontario Intelligencer; you'll read it and you'll always be glad you did, especially when guests come over for the evening and remark, "What beautiful furniture you have, Mrs. Vanderpool!"

Oliver Jason Brown has a furniture store. Oliver likes the furniture business because it is a nice business and there is some money in it and because he loves good furniture. He loves to buy good chairs and tables and beds and things; he likes to run his hand lightly over a glossy smooth walnut or maple table top; he likes to travel to Grand Rapids or Chicago or sometimes to places in New York State or North Carolina to buy things for people's living rooms and dining rooms; and he particularly enjoys talking about good furniture and selling it. Oliver Jason Brown knows an awful lot about furniture and sometimes he's sort of sorry that lots of people only seem interested in the price.

Not so long ago Oliver went to the furniture market and bought a lot of beautiful stylish things and while he sold a good many, he didn't sell them all. That's why he's going to have a furniture sale this month and that's why he's running an ad in the Ontario Intelligencer. He likes to advertise in the Daily Ontario Intelligencer because nearly everybody in Belleville reads it. Whether his wife is advertising for a new maid in the want ads or whether he, himself, is running a Thanksgiving or Christmas or Brides' Special, he knows the Ontario Intelligencer always gets RESULTS!

So the first thing that Oliver Jason Brown does is to call up the Ontario Intelligencer and reserve some SPACE. He hasn't written his ad yet so his space looks like this:

—but much larger, of course. When Oliver has ordered space he likes to take a pencil and ruler and draw the space on a big piece of white paper. Then he sits and looks at it for a while. He thinks of the things he'd like to say. He is so proud of his furniture that he thinks everybody else ought to be just as proud and so he is often tempted to write something like this:

If you've bought furniture like before, you know how good it is and if you haven't, your friends will tell you. I wish you would and this week because I'm selling some of the same at very special Prices.

Respectfully,
Oliver Jason Brown

and let it go at that. Once he did write that very thing and it really got good results and lots of people came to his store and bought furniture. But deep down in his heart Oliver knows that people are very busy doing lots of important things and really haven't time to go shopping unless they've got a pretty good idea beforehand of what they want to buy and how much they want to pay for it; and one reason they read Ontario Intelligencer ads in the first place is to get information that will help them make up their minds.

So at this point Oliver usually walks through his store and picks out one or two or three particularly nice things that he wants to tell everybody about. Then he goes down the street to the Ontario Intelligencer office and asks to see the advertising manager or one of his helpers. Oliver says, "I want to advertise some Louis XV living room suites. They have hand-carved French walnut frames and are covered in very handsome silk and linen brocatelle and they have durable moss filling." The Ontario Intelligencer man goes over to a table and picks up a big book that looks like a mail-order catalog, not as thick but much larger, and says "Let's see if we can find something in the ADVERTISING SERVICE book that looks like what you want to sell." So Oliver Jason Brown and the advertising man turn to the furniture section of the book which is part of the Advertising Service the newspaper buys every month and pretty soon the advertising man asks, "Does this look like it?" Oliver takes a quick squint at the ILLUSTRATION in the book and says "That's it exactly!" And before you can say "Jack Robinson" the Ontario Intelligencer's advertising man has taken a big scissors and cut the illustration out and pasted it on a sheet of white paper; and now the space that Oliver is going to buy looks like this:

Then the advertising man turns to another page in the big book and he finds a HEADING that looks like this:

and, he pastes that at the very top of Oliver Jason Brown's space which is already beginning to look a little bit like an ad. Then he turns to still another page in the big book and he finds another heading that says, "AUGUST FURNITURE SALE!" in great big letters and he pastes that down in the ad, too right in the spot where it will be the most readable and do the most good.

Meanwhile Oliver has thought up all the things he wants to say about his furniture. He goes over and sits down and writes his COPY on a piece of scratch paper. One of the helpers copies it off neatly on the typewriter and brings it over to Oliver and the Ontario Intelligencer man, and after figuring how much space Oliver's copy will take, the advertising man blocks it in roughly with a heavy pencil and a ruler and so now Oliver's space looks like this:

and is a COMPLETED LAYOUT for his ad because you can be sure that Olivar has seen to it that the SIGNATURE (the name of his store and the address) is included, too. Oliver's ad is five newspaper columns wide and fifteen inches deep and now the advertising man has to get busy and put the ad into production because it's going to run in the next day's Ontario Intelligencer.

After Oliver Jason Brown has gone back to his store, the advertising man chooses the kind and size of TYPE for his ad and then goes to a big cabinet where he quickly finds some very interesting-looking pink papier mache molds of each of the two headings and the furniture picture that Oliver and he have picked out of the Advertising Service book. These molds are called MATS, which is short for MATRICES. The newspaper gets hundreds of mats with its Advertising Service books each month and they look something like this:

A mat is something like the wax impression the dentist makes when he is going to fill your tooth. Just as the dentist eventually makes his inlay from the wax impression, just so does a man called a STEREOTYPER make a cast from each of these molds, or mats, by putting them into a machine called a CASTING-BOX and pouring hot molten metal into them. When the metal cools, there, sure enough, are the PRINTING PLATES or CUTS of the picture and headings for Oliver Jason Brown's ad all ready to be LOCKED UP in a FORM, with lots of type and things — enough to make a full newspaper page. Then another mat is made of the form of type and cuts—and from that mat a tremendous curved printing plate is cast. Finally, this plate, with Oliver's ad on it, is bolted to the cylinder of a big ROTARY PRINTING PRESS where it can print the picture and story of Oliver's fine furniture in thousands of Ontario Intelligencers that nearly everyone in Belleville will read.

And so Oliver Jason Brown is going to run his ad. He is going to get a lot of trade and sell a lot of furniture to people that wouldn't know they could buy such fine chairs and end-tables and davenports for so little money if Oliver Jason Brown didn't tell them about it in the Ontario Intelligencer.

You see, besides knowing something about furniture, Oliver knows something about people. He knows that one of the reasons they buy a good newspaper and read it regularly is because they find MONEY-SAVING NEWS in the ads. Oliver knows that this kind of news is just as important and interesting as news about the President or about Germany and Italy and China — and sometimes even more so! That's why he advertises in the Daily Ontario Intelligencer just as regularly as clock work. And that's why he —and Mrs. Oliver Jason Brown—read the Ontario Intelligencer every single day!

Johnny Rizzo Provides Poke That Beat Chicago Cubs 2-0 But Pirates' Lead Clipped

Pittsburgh Has Only 4 1-2 Game Lead Over Giants

NEWSOM BRILLIANT

St. Louis Hurler Pitches One-Hitter Against Detroit

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR.

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

While the "pep" boys, Lep Handley and Pep Young, and Mace Brown, the great rescuer of the Pittsburgh mound staff, have earned and received plenty of credit, perhaps the main reason why the Pirates are holding to the National League is because Johnny Rizzo can knock 'em out of the park.

Rizzo has proved to Pittsburgh fans that the New York baseball theory—there's no argument like a home run—is hard to beat. Last season the Bucs hit only 47 homers all season. This year they have, 42 to date with 12 games still to play. And an even dozen of them have come from Rookie Rizzo's bat.

Johnny provided the big poke yesterday with that 12th homer to help beat the third-place Chicago Cubs, 2-0, after Gabby Hartnett's wrecking crew had won the first two games of the series.

Lead Is Clipped

Despite the victory, Pittsburgh's lead was clipped to 4½ games as New York Giants romped to a double victory over the Phillies, 11-0 and 14-6. Besides their one-hit hits, the Giants got the benefit of 14 passes and 10 Philly errors.

The Yankees stretched their American League margin to 7½ games over Cleveland by turning back the Athletics twice, 4-3 and 8-2 while the Indians came through with a single 5-4 decision over the Chicago White Sox. The real feature of the American League day, however, was the one-hit game hurled by Buck Newsom of St. Louis.

Newsom, the Browns' one successful flinger, whiffed 12 Detroit batsmen, and granted only one single, to George Tebbetts, in beating the Tigers 7-1. In a double header opener, Detroit came back to earn a 9-8 victory in the 11th on the nightcap when Tebbetts made a pinch single behind doubles by Rudy York and Pete Fox to complete a two-run rally.

Two Homers to Win

The Yanks made good use of their favorite weapon, the homer, to beat the A's. Lou Gehrig knocked one in each game and Bill Dickey in the first, and George Selkirk broke up the opener by hitting for four bases in the ninth inning.

Washington drove Boston Red Sox a little deeper into third place with a 7-1 victory, engineered by Harry Kelley, who hurled five-hit ball and drove in three tallies.

Good pitching marked a pair of bills. Fred Fitzsimmons hurled a three-hitter to give Brooklyn a 2-0 decision over Boston, then Lon Pete won his eighth straight, 6-4. Paul Derringer chalked up his 15th victory for Cincinnati, 5-4 over St. Louis, but the Cards' Clyde Shoun spoiled much fill-flinging and Ducky Medwick socked a homer to take the nightcap, 8-1.

THROUGH?

In the middle of what appeared to be one of the best seasons he ever enjoyed, Pitcher Lefty Grove, ace of Boston's Red Sox staff, has suddenly found himself robbed of his effectiveness by his arm going "dead" intermittently. After the first attack the great southpaw took a few days rest, but has been hampered in every start since.

ZIPPERED "HOT DOGS"

Zippered weiners are the latest sensation on the march of progress. As demonstrated by this young lady at Cleveland, Ohio, the new arrangement enables "hot-dog" lovers to enjoy the succulent interior without having to gnaw through the skin envelopes. The zipper, when pulled down, strips off the skin of the weiner. Now if zippers can only be attached to bananas, everyone will be happy—maybe

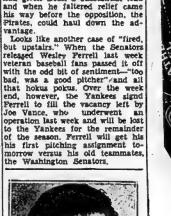
According to a recent press dispatch from England, top Canadian motorcycle racers in that country are drawing down as high as $500.00 per month. Eric Oultrey, former rider, is considered top. Goldie Rentall is another first division rider, while our own native son, George Pepper, now captain of the Newcastle team, is also among those of the higher flight. Other top Canadians are Jimmy Gibb, Bruce Vanier and Elwood Stillwell. Incidentally they have an "All-Canada" racing team, that takes on all comers and the surprising thing is the large and continued attendance, the average being 30,000 fans bi-weekly at the West Ham track.

Motorcycle racing in England is carried on over quarter mile tracks and mostly at night. Here's the set-up for their team racing—there are eight teams in each division and eight riders to a team. Two teams will meet in 20 four-rider heats with points going to first, second and third, total points count for the team's standing, while individual points count in the rider's pay. The average is about $7.50 for each point, with $5.00 for starters. There are about ten riders who can average $500.00 per week with the range in the around $200.00 per week. Pepper is rated as worth the $600.00 per week category, which makes him one of the top riders.

Of course the motorcycle racing season lasts about six months, although the riders do engage in the odd independent race. The biggest single distinction we find of every comes when the riders race independently and individually for the division of a $2,000.00 prize and the world's championship in the fall.

Around these quarter mile speedway tracks the motorcycle racers average 45 miles per hour. Each rider wears a heavily padded suit and especially constructed crash helmets, as spills and upsets are often and frequent, but seldom are there fatal accidents, although there is nursing a broken arm at present. George Pepper is one of the more popular Canadian riders and expects to be home for Christmas enroute to Florida and the sand racing beach at Daytona Beach, where he and some other English riders will attempt to lower the world's motorcycle racing record next February.

Marvin Sheeley, rugged United States football halfback, recently joined the Winnipeg Blue Bombers" and will replace the fleet-footed Fritz Hanson, who is out with an injured ankle at present. Sheeley made the 1937 Associated Press little All-American team as quarterback. Speaking along the lines of football makes us wonder what is being done locally regarding the organization of the local "Panthers" for the 1936 O.R.F.U. season? Some good football was seen last year with the Kingston "Signals," the R.C.A.F., and Belleville grouped together.



Corryvreckan Bill Fry informs us that the Coloured "Red Raiders, f. 1937 Intermediate "B" champions of the O.R.F.U. will most likely be included in the local group. The "Red Raiders" are strengthening somewhat for the rapidly-approaching football campaign, while the "Fyers" and Kingston squads are also ready for action. In Belleville there has been little or no pre-season preparations for the 1936 football season. What's the matter boys? A couple of live executive members could put the game over without much trouble, although considerable missionary work is needed. The local "Panthers" have sufficient equipment, but are sadly in need of a coach.

It's all even in the Oshawa-Cobourg Junior Lake Shore playoffs Ralph McCabe hurling fourhit ball to win 10 to 2 on Saturday. Cobourg has touched McCabe for only seven hits in two games, but struck out eight on Saturday. The local Kiwanis kids will be keenly interested in the result of the third and final game, to be played about Wednesday when Smith of Cobourg will no doubt oppose McCabe.

Playing sensational ball behind the four-hit pitching of Frank McNally, the Peterboro seniors evened their C.O.B.L. play-offs on Saturday, taking the day's honors 2-1. The Pets ganged up on Johnny Turner for a trio of runs in the third, while Oshawa scored their lone counter in the sixth. The Petes played a fine defensive game, Clarke and Murphy making fine plays. McNally vindicated himself for the wild mediocre showing he made in Oshawa the previous Saturday. A la Dizzy Dean, he says what is commonly referred to as "forgetting em" through. Dizzy Bowden, who is preparing to join the ranks of the benedicts in the near future, we do hear.

Despite the fact he was shelled from the hilltop, Dizzy Dean still remains undefeated as a Chicago roundman. Fortunately the Cubs had given Dean a substantial lead and when he faltered after doing his way before the opposition, the Pirates, could haul down the advantage.

Looks like another case of "fired, but upstairs." When the Senators released Wesley Ferrell last week veteran baseball fans passed it off with the odd bit of sentiment—"too bad, was a good pitcher"—and all that hokus pokus. Over the week end, however, the Yankees signed Ferrell to fill the vacancy left by Joe Vance, who underwent an operation last week and will be lost to the Yankees for the remainder of the season. Ferrell will get his first pitching assignment tomorrow versus his old teammates, the Washington Senators.

Junior champion of Ontario and runner-up to Jim Hogan in the Canadian Junior Golf Championships. ABOVE, of Toronto, added to his golf laurels by capturing the sixth annual Canadian intermediate tournament at Lorelei, posting a 36-hole score of 153. Hogan wound up in a tie for second place.

Golf Facts

Damp Woods

Of all the clubs in the bag the most valuable seem to get the least care. I'm referring to the wood club. Some players consider one or more iron clubs their most valuable tools, and perhaps those clubs are better liked than the clubs with wood heads, but the iron clubs can be replaced with little or no trouble, whereas the woods cannot.

I may be contradicting some of the claims made by manufacturers of wood clubs, but the fact remains that there is a mighty small chance of duplicating exactly the wood club which becomes unfit for use. You can get a club which appears to be an exact duplicate with no outward show of difference but the proof will be in the using." I don't know of a case where the feel of the original club has been copied.

The point I'm trying to bring out is simply this: Your wood clubs are well worth all the care you can give them. Above all things the heads should be kept free from the moisture which they are often exposed to on rainy days or when the fairways have been watered.

No doubt you have "spats" for the heads, but you probably neglect to keep them on the clubs. Keep them there when not using the club, and if you do have to use it in the rain or on a wet fairway, be sure to dry the clubhead immediately.

Position of the Hands

Of all the movements that spoil a putt, the habit of letting the hands stop behind the ball holds a prominent place. It is a fault from which all players suffer at some time or another, and it is quite common among those who find themselves taking fives and sixes on many holes.

The fault seems to occur rather often because the player loses track of what he does with his hands. Instead of keeping his attention on the positions and movements of his hands, he allows the clubhead and ball to take his eye, with the result that he makes the mistake of figuring that it is impossible to keep the swings back and forth his hands must be moving properly.

No greater mistake can be made. It is as if it were possible to keep the clubhead forward by moving the hands in the opposite direction. And this is just about what happens every time you fail to let your hands lead the clubhead back to the putter. Then hold whatever position you are in at the finish of the stroke long enough to see if your head has in fact forward as it was to begin with. It should be forward of your left leg with a long putt and if it isn't, you can be sure that your hands did not swing properly in the downswing.

As a check on this point you can observe the position of your left hand in relation to your left leg at the start of your back-swing with

AT THE McCARTHY

"Little Miss Thoroughbred"

"Little Miss Thoroughbred" at the McCarthy theatre, introduces to the screen a new child actress and for which the studio predicts a very glowing future.

The child for whom this brilliant future is predicted is four-year-old Janet Chapman, who plays the title role in "Little Miss Thoroughbred," a part that fairly equals in importance those of the three adult leading players, Claire Lilel and Ann Sheridan of "Alaska Raid" fame, and Frank McHugh.

Little Janet has the appealing task of portraying an adorable searching for a father believed exists, and the complications of the story ensue when she elects Lilel to be her father.

Lilel and Frank McHugh are a couple of race track followers who are trying to make their living by "beating" the horses, and Janet is accepted into their strange menage, which also includes Ann Sheridan, as Lilel's wife, when Lilel becomes convinced the child is responsible for a cycle of good luck that he begins to enjoy soon after she shows up.

Pursued by the police—for kidnapping Janet—and by a gang of shifting racketeers—for unknowingly cutting into their racket—Lilel and his companions travel from track to track enjoying ever-increasing fortune until the police do catch up with them. But everything turns out all right when Janet reminds that Lilel is indeed her daddy and he accepts the title with all the sincerity any little orphan soul wish for.

"Little Miss Thoroughbred" is wholesome entertainment, that will please every member of every family and during the engagement at the McCarthy theatre, all should avail themselves, of the opportunity to see this heart-warming little child star in her first picture, that stops in entertainment.

An excellent program of features precede the above, including Ken Murray and Jones Family, hilarious comedy offering "Doctor Cupid," a clever Looney Tune musical cartoon entitled "Porky at the Crockeroo," Evelyn Thawl and Jeffrey Lynn in a very entertaining musical comedy "Out Where The Stars Begin" and another in the popular Floyd Gibbons true adventure series "Playing With Danger" a story packed with thrills and action that all will thoroughly enjoy.

AT THE BELLE

"Little Miss Broadway"

The arrival of a new Shirley Temple musical picture means new of headline interest to dance fans, crooners and "alligators". For every one of the Baltimore Oriole's tune-filled shows has meant new melodies to lead the nation's song parade. "Little Miss Broadway", Shirley's newest 20th Century-Fox film at the Belle Theatre, features a song-hit score by Walter Bullock and Harold Spina. Included in the new hit roster are "Be Optimistic", "We Should Be Together", "If at the World Were Paper", "Swing Me Paisida, (Honey Child)" and "How Can An Old-Fashioned Song", "How Can I Thank You" and "Little Miss Broadway". It's all about a little miss who lives in a vaudeville hotel with her foster family, Edward Ellis and Phyllis Brooks. When Jimmy Durante's face band gets too loud in its rehearsals, the wealthy neighbor, Edna Mae Oliver, complains and threatens to close the hotel. George Murphy, her nephew interceding and while he wins nothing but enmity from his prim aunt, at least he wins the favor of fair Phyllis. Led by the astonishing

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Ring Should Be Returned

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Last Christmas I asked you what would be a suitable gift for a young man, with whom I was going "steady". You suggested, among other things, neckties, and I bought myself something him six at $1.50 a piece. I never saw him wear any of the ties, but once, and that was on Christmas day, when he brought me my diamond.

What was my amazement, but to say this father wearing the ties I gave my boy friend. I was so hurt and angry that I would have broken off with him immediately, but if I do, I suppose I will have to send back my diamond, for which I have become very much attached. If I break with him, must I return the ring?

It is customary, assuming you're of good taste, to return all gifts of value when an engagement is broken. So I'm afraid your diamond must go, if you break with the young man who didn't have your best interests. Perhaps he considered the ties too elderly, or maybe he didn't want himself to be the ties without so much as "by your leave."

If you really like this boy, better consider very before you throw him. But your letter sounds to me as if you were keener on the ring than the boy.

The Girl Proposes

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For almost two years I have been keeping company with a girl. I have no intention of ever marrying her, because she is not the type of girl suited for me.

She is deeply in love with me, and has asked me to marry her. Though I enjoy going out with her immensely, would you advise me to keep seeing her? Or would it be wise to stop going with her altogether before the matter gets too serious?

Troubled

Evidently the matter has got to be serious with the young lady, since she has already proposed to you. If you're no intention of marrying her, I'd say why prolong the affair? At the same time, it would be well to bear in mind that many a brave young fly, who has no intention of dropping on the fly paper, finds himself there at last.

Not Allowed To Go Out With Boys

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Being at the giddy age of 18, I'd like to accept invitations I receive. But have been forced to refuse on account of the attitude by mother has taken regarding going out with young men. She thinks, if I'm invited to work, I'll have more invitations when I'm older, and suggests that I wait. But you know if a girl hasn't a few boys interested in her, even at my age, girls begin to shun her.

Another thing. I've been refused permission to drive the family car, which I obtained my master's in high school. When I told the girls this, they laughed, and asked me if I was going to begin to live after I got out of school. Mother says she will be considering my mother a killjoy? Should I take matters into my own hands in spite of all the other girls having such jolly times, or would it be wise for me to accept invitations I have received, regardless?

Anxious-to-know

When you are 18, you'd be justified in accepting invitations, regardless. I suppose you mean, would it be right for you to keep them a responsible girl of 18 isn't allowed to go out with other young people? It's a case of the far hill looking greener.

Perhaps if the ban were lifted, and she went out with other young folks, the good times wouldn't seem so marvelous after all.

The Hostess Writes, An Invitation

"Won't you come to see us?" is one of the happy theme-songs of summer. Let's consider some of the amenities of the invitation that the ideal hostess makes.

First and most important, it is the mother in the family (or in there is no mother) who issues the hostess) who must send the invitation to a guest to spend a week-end or a longer visit in the house of that family. That is, we must receive a direct invitation from the hostess. An indirect invitation from some member of the family is not enough. Likewise, a girl should never go to visit at a boy's home, even if he is her fiance, without a written invitation from his mother, or whoever is the hostess in the home.

The invitation written by the hostess, which will, of course, reflect her hospitality, should be explicit—definiteness. The invitation, besides naming the date, should state approximately how long the guest is expected to arrive. Very often a time table is enclosed in the letter, with the suggested train marked. Information is given as to where and when the guest will be met. Or, if a guest is coming by car, the best route is explained.

What kind of clothes shall I take? This is one of the first problems that arises when we receive an invitation to visit, especially when it is for first visit. If we are making to a particular house, a thoughtful hostess realizes this, and gives us, in her invitation, a definite idea of what we will be expected to do and therefore what kind of clothes we will need.

It isn't rude . . . as some people mistakenly think . . . but the necessary politeness for a hostess to tell a guest the length of time for which the guest is invited. Thus can both hostess and guest make plans according to the time set, and there is no awkwardness or misunderstanding. "I hope that you can come to come on Tuesday, August 25th, and stay a week, or there is an excellent express train from here at four o'clock."

When the invitation is for a week end visit (what is usually meant by "a week-end") the hostess might well write, "Do, if possible, plan to arrive in time that leaves the city at four-thirty, and stay with us until the early Monday morning train that will make it possible for you to get in your office by a few minutes before nine."

Going-Away Gift

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A family, friends of ours, are planning a trip abroad. Naturally, it will be on the water about a month. We would like to show them some "going-away" gift, something suitable to use on this trip. What would you suggest? The mother and father are about forty years of age, and the children are a boy of sixteen and a girl of ten.

Mary

One of the most welcome of Bon Voyage gifts is a small, folding travelling clock . . . there are many excellent new designs on the market. Another valuable gift is a folding writing case, equipped with small sized note-paper. The man of the family will appreciate a case filled with divisions for foreign money. Or there is an especially-designed wallet for holding passports, letters of credit and travelers' checks. In a Gruppe department or shop you will find any number of convenient items for the travelling bag. A small key-chain with a small tag on which may be engraved the name and address.

And, for such a long journey, books, books, books, especially for the children. Books for them to read. Or for each a pencil, stamped package either with their name or initials, or, better, with the facsimile of their signature. . . . this will delight them. They would welcome a fountain pen. Or you might give the boy and girl two or three handkerchiefs, with her first name embroidered on them, a delight to the heart of any little girl.

There'll Be a Hot Time in the 'Ol Town
—THIS WEEK!

Many people will suffer unnecessarily from heat this week. They will fuss and fret and fan themselves as they scurry from counter to counter and store to store, looking for something.

Save steps, these hot days. Sit down in the shade of a cool porch. Glance through the advertisements in the newspaper. Find what you want before you go to buy it.

That's what advertisements are for. You can trust the advertisers to tell you about bargains in the ads. You can save money and minutes and many a headache if you read the advertisements — and HEED them.

Don't Fret Over Blood Pressure

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

The post-meridian atmosphere on the porches of summer hotels is likely to be filled with lengthy discussions of high blood pressure. The occupants of the rockers, ceaselessly rocking back and forth, whisper that the gentleman with the cane is here on account of the fact that he has just learned he has high blood pressure. And naturally he is in a very depressed state of mind and has almost forgotten to get angry at the income tax.

Then the blow may fall upon anyone else on the porch, and through a casual visit to the doctor one discovers that he or she, too, has blood pressure.

Sometimes one feels that doctors ought to stop telling people about their blood pressure, for the average person takes such a serious view of it. The word "high pressure" sounds as if you were sitting on the valve of a steam boiler which might blow up any time. Doctors often forget to explain that they do not take such a serious view of the matter.

Blood pressure is not a fixed thing. It varies and changes from time to time, especially from emotion.

These emotional factors in causing a rise of blood pressure may be transitory. A good account of emotions temporarily influencing blood pressure is seen in the psychic workings of the lie detector. The whole point of the test is that blood pressure changes with the emotional content of the conversation and the questions asked.

According to the studies of Mueller, the day and night fluctuations in people with high blood pressure follow the same pattern as normal individuals. He found that the emotional stimuli affect those with essential high pressure with extreme reactions, while in normal persons there would be only mild reactions.

There are, however, many cases where blood pressure has continued on a high level for entirely non-emotional areas. Thus a typical case related by Weiss of a young man who had a blood pressure continuously over 160 (diastolic 100). He was found on examination to have chic disturbance, with fears and an anxiety neurosis. After three months of treatment, purely phychologic in character, his pressure went down to 130-140 (90) and remained there.

I agree with Menninger that the attempts to treat high blood pressure with a rest cure—forbidding golf, walking or work at the office—the only forms of relaxation to which they have ever been able to cause more damage than cure.

Boy Has Loved Girl Faithfully for Years

An Argument Broke Up Their Friendship, but He Yearns to Renew It

By VIRGINIA LEE

THEY DID love once. . . . can't they do it again? That note seems to be the one sounded over and over again in today's mail.

Our first correspondent is a young man who signs himself MOODY. He loved a lovely girl and went with her for a time, until an argument broke p their beautiful friendship. He has been trying ever since—for two years—to forget her, but has not been successful.

In the meantime he has reformed in character he says, and would like very much to be friends again, but doesn't know how to approach her. He really is "desperately" in love with her, he writes.

I'd be not see why you do not write to her instead of to me, Moody, my son. An honest, sincere letter, telling her how you have changed and how much you still love and want her friendship, if not her love, surely would bring an answer and probably a visit.

There is no use loving her so desperately at a distance. She will be flattered and touched by your faithfulness in loving her all this time, and will, I am sure, believe you when you say you have changed. A good many little re-doings enough to accept you for life, it is better that you make the effort to win her. You may as well know how she stands, and not spend your time in doubt. I'd write and tell her, if I were you, and see if she will come to see you. After that, it will be up to show her how sincere you are in love and try to win her. Good luck!

LONELY is 18 years old and has several boy friends, but they "don't" satisfy," and wants girl friends, too. There are several girls about but she is not shy when doesn't know how to get acquainted and what to say or do when they are contacted. Suggestions are solicited.

I thought at-first your letter was from a girl and then decided you are a boy. Can't you get one of your pals to introduce you to a girl? Then talk about everyday things—ball games, movies, weather—what you like to do, etc. Maybe ask her to go to a movie with you. It will all come easy once you have started.

RED has red hair, as you might guess, and her friend also has red hair. Her mother objects to the match, because she says they will have dreadful looking children. Red says this is her mother's only objection to the match. Of course I only have her word for this.

What do I think are the principal things that make for married happiness? she wants to know.

If the color of your boy friend's hair is the only thing your mother objects to, and he is sweet and good as you say, you should not allow him up, but stick to him. Red, after all this time. You would probably have cute little red-heads for children. There is no disgrace in being red-headed. Hair of that color is beautiful.

No, don't lie about your age. I heard of a girl who did that, and another kind (?) friend called up the man's employer and told him how old she was. She wasn't as old as she said, and she had quite a time getting the matter straightened out.

Love each other, try hard to understand, suppress all urge to help each other in every possible way, and you will be happy though married.

PSYCHOLOGIST GIVES HINTS ON TUTORING

By GARRY C. MYERS, PH. D.

Head Department Parent Education, Cleveland College, Western Reserve University

A GREAT MANY school children are being tutored during the summer, and some will continue with them. But a few, also, will have been harmed rather than helped, having come to loathe the very subjects they had failed in at school.

Not many parents can be good tutors of their own child. They lend to do more harm than good to their angry at the child and abuse him when he does not learn. Usually a calm, poised and patient stranger is better.

If the child to be tutored has failed in fifth grade reading, for example, the tutor's problem is to find materials for him which he can read with ease and interest enough to appeal to him. He must be led not to feel ashamed of reading so easy matter. It may have to be of second or even first grade difficulty. How easy it must be practically any person can find out by trying the child with graded reading matter of varying difficulty. No standardized test is needed, but just lots of common sense—especially very rare.

Get Self-Teaching Material

The tutor should go with the child to the library and help him help her select materials. Together they will find interesting magazines, books with many pictures and not much reading, every-day things. Here again it must be practically any person can find out by trying the child with graded reading matter of varying difficulty. No standardized test is needed, but just lots of common sense—especially very rare.

The tutor should go with the child to the library and help him help her select materials. Together they will find interesting magazines, books with many pictures and not much reading, everyday things. Here again it must be make a scrap book, cutting pictures from old magazines and newspapers and printing or typing under each picture appropriate word, phrase or sentence. We all dislike pencils to her which she will print or type for him to read.

The tutor should assemble considerable self-teaching material in the form of "seat work" or easy, very easy exercises to help sustained by a number of publishers.

Many of these materials there are available such materials a guide both the child and tutor, showing them how to proceed with which the learner does all the work right in the book, telling himself as he reads the printed instructions and then does each step. Such self-help booklets are quite but little guidance from the tutor. Indeed, they encourage self-able, by using them alone, to make a considerable start with very little stamp on it. I shall be glad to name such helpful books and their publishers. Also I shall be glad to help any tutor, as well as I am able, with her problems, if she will write me about them.

DUEL UNDER FAMOUS OAKS

New Orleans high school boys and girls are now dueling under the famed and guarded "dueling oaks" where a century and one-half ago young Creoles fought to the death with rapiers or pistols to avenge insults to their honor.

The dueling of this era is comparatively harmless, however, as weapons have rubber buttons on the sharp points.

And when it's raining, classes are postponed until fair weather.

The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

CHAPTER XXXII

Three weeks later Chris received the letter in Vienna, and felt dull and dispirited for days. Ursula had planned to live, She had arranged everything with power. But she had not counted, and she had left her child to him. In the end he went to Katie and told her the story.

"She left it to you?" she said incredulously.

"Miss Simpson says."

"It's ridiculous. Why, should she?"

"God only knows," he told her wearily. "I suppose not literally. She meant that I was more or less to look after it."

"This in my house! You don't expect to hand me a baby like that, do you?"

"No," he said. "No, I suppose not."

"And you are to support it?"

"I imagine the father will do so."

"Oh! So you know who the father is. Well, that's something."

There was evidently to be no help from Katie, and in the days that followed she seemed to be coldly jealous of the child and even suspicious. One day she said abruptly, "Chris, is this baby yours?"

"You know well enough that it isn't. I never saw the girl except a few months before he was born."

"Then why is the father? Tell me that, and I'll believe you."

"I haven't any intention of telling you, and I don't care whether you believe me or not."

Undoubtedly it was difficult during those days. He was tired with the endeavor to get all he needed in a shorter time than he had thought, and the courses were proving more expensive than he had anticipated. Now he had a baby on his hands, and is annoyed and irritated him. One day he wrote Jerry Gardner, the business office of his where he played working:

"I have, as you know, no responsibility for this child. Ursula asked me to look after him, but charge is not my job, not mine. In the meantime, I suggest that, if you have nothing in view, you take a trip where he is until I come back. I know a childless couple in that country who might take him and pay him. They are citizens of mine and prosperous farmers, and have no children. I doubt if money will enter into such an arrangement, but my own idea would be that you continue your monthly checks, and that the money be banked for his education later."

He wrote the letter in a coffee-house in the Alserstrasse late one afternoon. Wrote it in his usual neat hand, to the noise of billiard balls clicking, to the rustle of the papers being read about him, to the clatter of coffee cups and the hum of conversation. Wrote it, then went out and mailed it at a street letter box, felt somewhat relieved.

Winter lasted long that year in Vienna. Chris was working steadily now, Everything was grist to his mill. He was also, during an X-ray course, all the surgery he could find, even bronchoscopy.

He and Katie had established a modus vivendi of sorts. Ursula was his for work, but Saturday afternoons were hers. On Saturday night he would get into his worn dinner clothes, and they would go to the Red Tabern or somewhere else. It was for these nights Katie lived. She would sit at the table sipping her sweet champagne and stare round-eyed at the boxes, filled with couples and gay with flowers and uniforms.

The jewels and dresses made her feel cheap and thwarted. And one Monday after such an evening went boldly to the Kartnerstrasse and ordered some expensive clothes. She was terrified afterward, but the thing was done.

She bought some clothes. Chris."

"That's right. If you needed them."

"But I mean clothes." she said desperately. "Good clothes. They cost a lot."

They had a matter of fact, cost five hundred dollars, about a tenth of his total capital when he left America. He tried then to explain his financial situation to her, but she only cried. He paid for it, paid the bills, not only because he had to, but because as the days went on he had a queer increasing sense of guilt toward her that she was financially nothing to him.

His work was his real love now. To that he gave all he had. Lessons, clinics, lectures, operations. Abdominal surgery. Brain surgery. Simple amputations. Tentatively, a new instrument for stones in the kidney. Reading X-ray plates or, protected by lead aprons and lead screens, working with the machine itself. A great day when Chris used the bronchoscope and recovered a tack that had been embedded in a bronchial tube.

Then late in March, with the snow melting from the hoary head of the Rax and the grass growing green on the hillsides, he came to him with the announcement that Katie was to have a baby, and that he would have to do something about it.

"Do something? Do what?"

"You know I don't want a baby. I won't have one. Don't make me have one, Chris! Don't make me have one."

She was so alarmed that he had to hold her until she stopped shaking. Then he went back to her.

"It would...be something to live for, dear, to have a baby for you? That I'd like it, myself. You would, too, once it was over."

Once it was over, indeed. "You'd let me go through with it, wouldn't you? You don't have a very high opinion of me, do you? But I won't do it. I'll go somewhere else if you won't help me."

Katie, after a period of sullen silence, began to cry. And by morning she came home one night. Apologetic, but firm. A dozen ways to make amends for the past week.

"I'm sorry, Chris. I was wrong about having a baby. I'm sorry. You don't hate me, do you?"

"Of course I don't hate you," he said patiently. "...so glad, if you are."

She curled into his lap, and he held her there. He did not hate her. It was nothing so simple as that. He was, from then on, content with the needle light in her unaccountable eyes, and knew she would look like a child over a lesson. "I'll darn it. It's all right."

She was only twenty to his thirty-two, and he had not been sorry for her. He would have a moment of real tenderness then, and would caress her, her shining hair, soft and young under his hand.

No reply had come from Jerry Ames about Ursula's baby, and the letter he wrote to Hiram Mortimer and his wife:

"I do not know how to make the suggestion, but I remember that at one time you contemplated adding to your family. I know of one, a boy, with good blood on both sides of the house, that I am sorry to see go to an institution. What could be done, if you are interested, might be to take him for a few months without any obligation. After that...."

He was not telling them where the boy could be seen, and sent off the letter without much hope. Hiram and Amy were no longer young, and it was asking a good bit of them; might even revive painful memories of their own childlessness. Then late in May he got an answer from Hiram.

"We have the boy, and Amy is like a child with a new doll. He is a good boy, and I rather like him myself. It took us though we will keep him, and I'm going to-morrow to see about the necessary steps."

For the first time in months Chris felt that Beverly was safe at last. She never wrote, and Mortimer farm was far away. And the child would be safe, too. Sitting back in his chair, his long legs crossed out in front of him, he thought again of old Dave, and Letitia who had sent him here, and of old Dave's disappointment that none of his sons had followed him into the ministry. Perhaps this boy would do that. If he were to have a descendant, he would be a minister.

They went back on America in the late spring of that year. Katie was not sorry to leave Vienna, nor was Chris. What was she going back to? Chris asked her once, when in the county of Lennox and Addington, and will commence cutting this winter.

TEST YOUR VOICE TO DISCOVER WHETHER IT IS SWEET OR RASPING

By JULIET SHELBY

Central Press Writer on Beauty

BEWARE of the high shriek and the monotonous mumble! You may have the most fascinating things on earth to say, but not even your most timid Mr. Milktoast is going to listen if ear-irritating noises are coming out of your mouth. And it isn't because of the words in the least—it is practically impossible for people to concentrate on the meaning of words if you have an unpleasant voice.

Perhaps you are sublimely innocent of the way you sound, and if it is another thing that your best friends won't tell you. Let's get on the safe side, give yourself this little test.

Stand in a corner and repeat aloud the words that run over and over said to your beau. You have just heard your voice at its best. Now remember how it sounded. Did say the things you would have liked to say, or did you, to the offending person. You have heard the uplifted, most inspiring tones in your voice. The walls threw back the sound and let you hear it very much as other people do. This will give you a very good idea of how your voice sounds and will also show you which tones to avoid and which you should strive for.

If you feel that your voice isn't all that it should be, try some exercises that have been used successfully by stars of the radio and screen. One cheering thing about voice correction is that it often gets results almost immediately.

The first step in any voice improvement campaign is to go to your doctor for a thorough check-up of deep breathing exercises. Do them regularly for about ten to fifteen minutes. Press the palms of your hands to your sides above your waist and take a long, deep breath. Hold it well there and count further apart. The idea is to expand your chest in the diaphragm region, rather than to raise your hands into your body as they will leave your lungs.

Sing against the edge of a c... This exercise is to help you control and it also improves your pitch resonance. Hold your nose and hum "m-m-m-m" in your natural voice. Relax your throat by rolling your head around on your shoulders. If you are tense your voice is sure not to be high, light and unpleasantly penetrating. Yawning exercises are also fine for making your voice correct. Imagine tension, go limp from the solar plexus as many times a day as you can.

Take about ten minutes off every day and go to your room alone, sit in a chair and read to yourself. In this way you can correct the most agreeable sounds and encourage the good.

With a well modulated and charming voice you will soon have an admiring and appreciative audience.

GERMAN TR ANSATLANTIC FLIERS REACH NEW YORK

Their flight a secret until U. S. Air bases were contacted by radio for weather information, the giant German land airplane, Brandenburg, is shown (TOP), as it passed over Long Island, N.Y., completing its non-stop flight from Berlin to Floyd Bennett field, outside New York, 25 hours after its take-off from the German capital. Capt. Alfred Henke, commander of the ship, was given a rousing reception on arrival at the airport, as seen in the lower photo. The experimental flight may be preparatory to North Atlantic air transport service planned by German air authorities.

RUBINOFF RECOVERING

Showing plainly the effects of the serious illness which followed an appendicitis operation last May, Dave Rubinoff, famous violinist, is shown in bed at a Detroit hospital. Though sitting up for the first time in months, he already has his violin with him and is planning new arrangements for his orchestra.

„THOSE BIG BATS ARE BOOMING AGAIN!

Another way to caption this picture might be—POWER. It's part of the slugging array of those devasing New York Yankees, for these many years the scourge of the American League and the despair of more than a few pitchers. Blessed with a made-to-order park at home, they nevertheless don't stop once they hit the road, and just keep on forgetting the finesse the oldtimers love to talk about and content themselves with hammering the opposition into the ground. The most annoying habit (to the seven other teams) that they have developed is that of going into "crucial" series one or two games in the lead, and coming out of the series four or five games in the lead. This season the Manhattan Maulers have been slower than usual warming up, but they appear to be under full head of steam at last and on the way to their third consecutive flag. Starting with Manager Joe McCarthy at the LEFT, the array includes Lou Gehrig, Charlie Ruffing, Lefty Gomez, Joe DiMaggio, Bill Dickey and Red Rolfe.

FAMOUS DIVA'S SONS TO BECOME U. S. CITIZENS

Cobb's Speed Monster

After hitting 350 miles an hour in trial runs, John Cobb, British sportsman, is ready to attack Geo. T. Eyston's automobile speed record of 312 miles an hour, on the salt beds of Bonneville, Utah. Cobbb sits in the tiny enclosed cupola, ahead of the front wheels, in the streamlined, aluminum body. There is no radiator, the two 2,700-horsepower motors being cooled with ice water.

Diver William Badders, of the United States navy, has his equipment buckled on as he prepares to submerge during tests made in Washington of a new breathing mixture which enables divers to attain greater depths and remain under water longer than has been the case heretofore. The new mixture used in the diver's air supply, was discovered by the U.S. navy and the bureau of mines and consists of helium and oxygen. Using the discovery Badders descended 600 feet in a diving tank and 400 feet under actual sea conditions.

SCENES AT GOSHEN AS McLIN WON THE HAMBLETONIAN

The Hambletonian, peak event of the season in trotting horse circles, is over for another year and crowned champion for 1936 was McLin, winner in two straight heats. The big bay son of Peter the Great is shown at the RIGHT, as he crossed the finish line in front in the first heat, leading home Earl's Princess Martha, who was second and Champlain in third place. At the LEFT Lawrence Sheppard, owner of the winning horse, receives the cup from Mrs. W. H. Cane, wife, of the owner of Good Time Park, where the big event is run. Sheppard had purchased McLin from Cane just 10 days before the race for a price of $20,000 and got back $19,994 of that for the Hambletonian win. Wearing the big smile on the other side of Mrs. Cane is Henry Thomas, 52-year-old-driver of the winner

Punishing him for his unlicensed ocean trip, Irishman Mulligan grounded Irishman Corrigan for five days—while the latter was aboard ship, bound for New York from Ireland.

Charged With Violation of Secrets Act

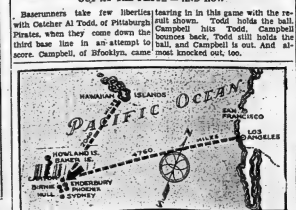
London, Aug. 15—(CP—Havas)—Robinson Walker, a dry goods salesman, yesterday was ordered to stand trial in the central criminal court on charges of violating the Official Secrets Act. Walker is accused of attempting to obtain plans of a Vickers-Armstrong percussion shell cap for a foreign power.

Inspector Burch of the Vickers-Armstrong Company told the court Walker had offered him sums varying from 10 shillings ($2.50) to £1 (£5) if he would lend him plans and blueprints of the percussion cap to be photographed. Burch said Walker told him he worked for the German, Russian and Italian secret services.

The Vickers Company advised Burch to furnish the plans, in order to trap Walker, he testified. Walker, according to his story, fell into the trap and was arrested as he was leaving Burch's home with the plans in his possession.

Detective Charles Burke testified Walker had the plans when he was arrested. Walker claimed he had only borrowed them in order to work out perfections in detail, he told police. Burch, however, stated Walker planned to take them to the Soviet Commercial Delegation here to be photographed.



The court then heard a statement by Walker, asserting his good faith and declaring he had been employed by the Soviet Commercial Delegation after he had invented a unit which improved diesel motor operation and had submitted it to the delegation.

Walker declared he had planned to perfect the percussion cap and offer the results of his work to the War Office or the Vickers Company, as he had done with the Diesel motor. If they refused to accept his work, he added, he would have gone "elsewhere."

Napoleon in Russia, Japan in China Likened by Catholic Missionary

Saskatoon, Aug. 16—(CP)—"Japan's position in China now is very similar to that of Napoleon in Russia in 1812," Rev. Louis Bouchard, S. J., Catholic missionary to Suchow, China, said here last night as the 35-year-old priest passed through the city en route to Montreal where he will spend four years studying theology before returning to Asia.

Father Bouchard described the bombings and warfare in China.

He paid tribute to the smart generalship of the Chinese, who in the knowledge that they could not afford to meet Japan's armies on open battlefields, due to inferior equipment, fought a guerilla war. The priest stated that ultimately China would win. The Japanese, he reported held only the main cities and many of these points were in continual danger of being retaken by Chinese guerilla troops.

CHINESE MASS MILLION TROOPS AROUND HANKOW

Japanese Challenge Other Defences of This Capital

SEE-SAW BATTLES

Shanghai, Aug. 16—(AP)—General Chiang Kai-shek was reported today to have massed 1,000,000 Chinese troops around Hankow, provisional capital toward which the Japanese have advanced slowly since occupying Kiukiang July 26.

The outer fringes of these defenses were challenged today by Japanese units making exploratory drives up both banks of the Yangtze river and southward toward Nanchang, Chinese air base 90 miles southeast of Hankow and 220 miles south of Hankow.

Because the defenders expect the most serious Japanese thrust to be along the Yangtze's south bank overland against the Canton-Hankow railway line, 19 divisions placed between the Yangtze and the Canton railway were reinforced by Cantonese troops.

Meanwhile, in large-scale preparations, a mobile army of 120,000 China's best troops moved into the south bank sector, causing optimism among the defenders that their lines there will withstand the Japanese thrust.

See-saw battles raged on both banks of the Yangtze in the Kiukiang area without major changes in positions as the war entered its 460th day. The most severe fighting was reported in hills around Red Lake where the Japanese were trying to push toward Juichang, 55 miles east of the Canton-Hankow railway.

Shoulders ranged through Kiukiang and Japanese military authorities said nearly all the 10,000 Chinese who remained in that Yangtze port after its occupation were "likely victims" of the dread disease.

NO LAW-BREAKERS, NO CIVILIZATION, SAYS—PROF. DUNLAP

Reforms Are Due to Those Who Have Pointed Out "Sad" Lives

UNIVERSAL SUBMISSION

By BENNIE TAYLOR

Associated Press Staff Writer

Berkeley, Calif., Aug. 16—(AP)—Criminologist Dunlap asserted today if there were no law breakers and all laws were obeyed there would exist no society.

In the lawbreaking class he put the Christian martyrs and George Washington, first president of the United States, who "was guilty of treason against his British".

The psychologist — Dr. Knight Dunlap, Professor of Psychology at the University of California at Los Angeles—championed the "rebellion" of youth in a series of the forthcoming (September) issue of the California Journal of Education of the University of California Alumni.

Dr. Dunlap argued there was nothing really wrong about violating laws if the laws and the "crimes" involved might even benefit society in the end by constributing to the elimination of old repressive statute.

How Changes Are Caused

His contention was that such refinements as have been made in civilization have been due largely to eventual realization by the public of the seeming futility of "shall not" and the breakers of "bad" laws.

Universal and unquestioned submission to all laws made, he said "inevitably entails reversion to savagery."

Dr. Dunlap suggested the division between "good" and "bad" laws represented the difference between "crimes" potentially beneficial to society and real offences against the public welfare.

Definition of Morality

He cited the fact that it was not a crime to commit suicide but was against which there was no law. On the same basis an individual might break a law if in doing so he considered he was benefiting others or at least not immoral.

Dr. Dunlap acknowledged the difficulty of acceptably defining morality and immorality, but in saying them were based on a standard that moral acts were those in accord with public welfare and immoral acts were those against or detrimental to public welfare.

"But then, as science is one's duty to promote public welfare and to avoid that which is harmful to it, he said, "we can hardly avoid the conclusion that under certain circumstances it is one's duty to commit crime. This situation rises because there are no written laws that are detrimental to public welfare."

'White Indians' May Be Descendants Of Norwegians, the First Settlers

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 16—(CP)—Possibility that forebears of the Indians who roamed the bush in the west coast of James Bay may have come to Canada before Columbus or Leif Ericson landed on North America is discussed in the Sault Daily Star by A. W. Curran.

Mr. Curran, publisher of the Star, suggests Norwegians may have been the first white men to visit these shores and that the "White Indians" may be their descendants. They speak the language of the Crees and have no knowledge of English.

"Mistigoche" or "Wamistigoche" is what the Cree Indians call white people. "Mistigo" means wooden and "coue" means head. Mr. Curran wonders how "mistigo" which is derived from a word meaning "oak" came into the Cree language when no oak grows in the James Bay area.

He suggests Norwegians may have been shipwrecked on the James Bay coast hundreds of years ago and their wooden ships called "mistigo."

The "White Indians" reported living on James Bay have fair hair and grey eyes, Mr. Curran was told by Sam Chapplee, a Cree Indian. Some have even been known to visit these shores and that the "White Indians" are the descendants of the Norwegian tongue in the language of the James Bay tribe.

Norse relics dating from the 11th century and reported found near Beechwoods, in Northwestern Ontario, were purchased by the Ontario Museum two years ago. Origin of the relics was questioned but a statement they actually were found in Ontario was disputed.

FARMER FINDS YOUNGSTER NEAR SHORE OF LAKE

Peter Elstone, Mud Covered And His Feet Wet When Found

IN GOOD CONDITION

Child Said He Had Not Eaten Since Entering Bush

Minden, Ont., Aug. 16—(CP) — Three-year-old Peter Elstone of Toronto, missing in the dense bush surrounding his grandfather's farm near here since early Sunday night, was found by a farmer this morning. Hungry, tired and covered with mud, the boy otherwise was in good condition.

Harold McCracken, the farmer, found the boy on the top edge of Muntain Lake. The shores of the lake are steep and McCracken said it is mis-step by the boy might have meant serious injury or death.

The boy's feet were wet and muddy, indicating he had stepped into the swamp in his wanderings after he ran Sunday from the barn at his grandfather's farm home when frightened by the stamping of horses. He slept under a bush last night during a heavy rain and was only slightly wet when found.

McCracken said the boy's first words were: "I called mother in the rain, but she didn't come. I want to go home."

Nothing to Eat

Peter said he had nothing to eat all the time he was "lost" in the bush which surrounds the Haliburton county farm land of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Elstone. There were many berries available but the lad had not picked any.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Elstone, the boy's parents, took up the search

2-LANE HIGHWAY BEING COMPLETED

Fifteen Men From City Given Employment on Road

Renewed activity on the proposed two-lane highway from Belleville, erected on that part of No. 2 Highway, Gilsons Corners, one mile east of the city was noted today as fifteen men from this district were given employment by the Provincial Sons, subcontractors for the project under Roadbuilding Lord, general contractors. The men were taken through Superintendent William Ross of the local Employment Office.

Here the work is said to be of a temporary nature, it will alleviate to a great extent the problems of this number of the district unemployed.

The men are being employed in the construction of cattle passes and bridges on the section of the Hastings County Home, which was part of the agreement entered into by representatives of the Department of Highways and officials of the Hastings County Advisory Board of the House of Refuge some time ago, in which provision for the house and property was made by the province, in order to facilitate construction of the highway at this point.

Appeal Launched to Transient Veterans

Stating that their organization and other recognized veteran associations are attempting to place the veterans on case of transient relief upon the Federal Government, the Canadian Veterans' Mission League in a letter sent to the local Employment Office, launches an appeal to transient veterans, to "remain in that locality or municipality where you have resided for the past year and you are eligible to draw relief or assistance.

"We as a veteran," the poster states, "can assist and show cooperation in this matter by refraining from constantly moving from place to place."

"We are attempting to work in cooperation with the various provincial governments to secure Federal recognition of your problems."

"Co-operation of the veterans is sorely needed."

PAROLED CONVICT, KENNETH STOVER KILLED IN CRASH

At Time of Death Was Driving a Stolen Car

HIT STREET CAR

Released From Collins Bay in October, 1936

Toronto, Aug. 16 (CP)—Kenneth Stover, 23, of Markham, Ont., recently paroled from Collins Bay penitentiary on an automobile theft charge, was killed here last night when a stolen automobile crashed into a street car loaded with home-bound baseball fans.

Stover suffered a broken neck, a fracture of the skull and was almost scalped in the collision which demolished the front of the car he was driving. He died instantly and knocked the heavy street car off its rails.

Police found the identity of the dead man was unknown. Since the new New York license plate he was at first thought to be the car's owner, Oliver B. Merrill, of 1 Bellevue Square. Later learned the car had been stolen from in front of the hotel where Mr. Merrill was staying.

Stover had been released from penitentiary, to which he was sentenced in October 1936, the new remission system giving 60 days off the two-year sentence for good behavior. He was given a train ticket to Chatham on his release. At the time of his release he was awaiting the suit of clothes given him at that time.

Stover's identity was learned from a train ticket found in his pocket at the hospital.

HOUSE, CONTENTS ARE DESTROYED

Wm. Sowers Near North-brook Suffers Heavy Loss

Flames of undetermined origin that threw a glow in the heavens for miles around destroyed completely the house and contents of William Sowers, farmer residing on the north side of Northbrook late Saturday night.

Sowers and his family were in Belleville at the time and knew nothing of the fire till his arrival late Saturday night. Neighbours who saw the glow of the flames, thought a bush fire was broken out, as the Sowers farm is situated in a more or less isolated spot in the vicinity.

Decision on the part of some of them to investigate, however, revealed in Sowers home a mass of smouldering ruins. The loss was covered by insurance.

Extensive Probe Of Alleged Attack On Young Girl

In an extensive investigation looking into the alleged attack upon Miss Eva Sherring, Belleville girl, who was attacked and injured by an unknown assailant, police may have to revert to questioning all suspected persons who "might have been about at night," stated Acting Chief Harman as he intimated the alleged attack upon Miss Sherring was not as serious as at first reported, however.

Although police have questioned two suspects already, clues of an encouraging nature have not brought to light by local police on the matter this afternoon, and other persons, known to have been in the vicinity of the attack on the girl, will be questioned by police today.

Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 16—(CP)—The Fascist dictatorships—Italy and Germany— are playing a waiting game, believing the British Empire holds losing cards, according to Dr. Hans Simons, New York Professor of Social Research. Political and business leaders gathered here for the Canadian Institute of Economics and Politics today considered the attitude Britain's strongholds. When the time is ripe, he said, the Fascist powers believe they will be well prepared to annex former British possessions with a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of effort.

ITALIAN GOV'T FAILS TO REPLY TO AID RUMORS

Rumor Says More 'Italian Aid is Sent to Spain

BALEARIC SITUATION

By J. F. SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 16—(CP Cable) — The Italian government has made no reply to Great Britain's action in calling Italy's attention to "certain allegations" that she has sent more troops to aid insurgent General Franco in Spain, in defiance of the Anglo-Italian gentlemen's understanding and the non-intervention agreement.

It is stated here it is not unusual for a government to make no reply to representations of this sort and perhaps Count Ciano, Italian Foreign Minister, will consider that to repeat the allegations does not intend to answer them.

Use of Balearic Isles

The use of the Balearic Islands in the western Mediterranean off the Spanish coast, as a base for Italian plane operations in Spain is understood to be one of the allegations repeated to Rome.

The Times (Independent) stated Monday that danger of intensification of the Spanish war "comes primarily from the activities of

RELIEF FIGURES HIGHER THIS YEAR

Mayor Bone Urges Jobless to Take Jobs That Are Offered

A hard Winter is in prospect and unemployed of the city who have been passing on seasonal work at the district harvest fields or berry and vegetable plots for jobs more to their liking, this opportunity will be never materialize, may be wishing they had accepted the work, it was stated by Mayor Jamieson Bone this morning in an appeal for workers of the city to go to the farms at a job they can which will return them something."

"We have cases on record where the farmers refusing work, such as farm work which has been offered at a wage of $30 per month and board. This is better than waiting for something else to turn up. The wage isn't too high, but it will at least help them keep their self-respect.

"Whether citizens know it or not our city relief figures are much higher than they were last year, and we can't expect much help from the government because we have not the estimate time ahead. Our budget won't see us through.

"You can't be too choosy about taking any kind of work that is offered these days," reminded the Mayor.

'Almost Certain' King and Queen Will Visit Dominion in 1939

Liverpool, Aug. 16.—(CP Cable)—The Liverpool Post in its London letter today said the King and Queen will "almost certainly" visit Canada and the United States during 1939, although no plans have yet been discussed and no invitations issued.

It was understood, the column said, that Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General of Canada, mentioned unofficially the possibility of a visit through an invitation from Canada they are that a strong political organization cannot be based on a system of free cooperation and association the dictators see signs of decay and weakness in the British attitude.

This view has led Hitler to withhold his demands for the return of Germany's war-lost colonies, Dr. Simons believed. Hitler is willing to wait while Mussolini builds up his Mediterranean fortifications near Britain's strongholds. When the time is ripe, he said, the Fascist powers believe they will be well prepared to annex former British possessions with a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of effort.

CONCERN ABATES IN BRITAIN OVER GAMES OF WAR

Only Three Papers Refer Editorially to Manoeuvres

SEE NO WAR

London, Aug. 16.—(CP-Havas) — Great Britain's concern over Germany's mass military manoeuvres appeared to be abating today, with only three newspapers devoting leading articles to the central European situation. This was in contrast to the press of Saturday, Sunday and Monday when most papers carried comment on dangers that might possibly arise from the war games.

Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express (Independent) renewed its plea for "splendid isolation" and spoke of "splendid isolation" and declared: "There could be no European war this year, or next."

"If there is one, Great Britain will not be involved," the Daily Express said. "No British interests are concerned in the nationalities dispute between Germany and Czechoslovakia."

Daily Mail View

Viscount Rothermere's Daily Mail (Independent) stressed the fact that though Britain must remain on the alert, there was no reason for undue fear in the European crisis.

STRANGE DEATH OF TWO COWS

Discovery of a mixture of Paris Green and salt found spread on the grass on the property of Herbert Kellar, Cronkhite farmer, and which is given as the cause of the mysterious death of a pair of two cows on Saturday is the cause of a rigid investigation on the part of police officials.

Looking for his cattle on Saturday, Kellar discovered the bodies of one lying in a small quarry on his farm. Spread on the grass near the dead cow was a mixture of Paris Green and salt. The dead animal's mouth was heavily coated with the mixture.

Kellar notified Provincial Police Constable Richard Drummond responded and discovered the remaining cow a short distance away, in a dying condition. Efforts to save the animal's life were fruitless as it died a few minutes after its discovery. A heavy coating of the lethal mixture appeared on the jaws of the animal.

Constable Dymond, with Chief of Police Jack Dandorf of Madoc Village are investigating the mystery.

Kellar is a farmer in more or less moderate circumstances, police said, and relied on the two cows for the milk and butter supply of a large family.

EXPLOSION - TORN BODY SOUGHT IN GEORGIAN BAY

Daniel George Dodge, Millionaire Terribly Injured From Explosion

FALLS FROM LAUNCH

Worker About Summer Home is Critically Injured

Little Current, Ont., Aug. 15—(CP)—The explosion-torn body of 21-year-old Daniel George Dodge, victim of a desire to hear dynamite explode, was sought today in 90 feet of water in Georgian Bay. His bride of 13 days was in hospital, the story-book romance of a millionaire's love for a telephone operator ended.

Dodge, heir to the motor-car millions, yesterday yielded to an impressed desire to learn if dynamite left by workmen at his Kagawong summer camp eight years ago still was in good condition. He asked a stick of the explosive and asked an employee to light a 14-inch fuse. That should have burned for three minutes. But the flame reached the dynamite in less than 10 seconds.

Terribly Injured

Terribly injured, Dodge was thrown to the floor of the camp garage by the force of the explosion. Dodge, the former Ann Laurin MacDonald, was out on the lake, fishing from a boat. Camp helpers were hurt, Lloyd Bryant so seriously it was feared he would die.

Young Dodge was drowned in the inside channel of the big bay, seven miles west of the Little Current port and not many miles from Gore Bay, when three years and two months the daughter of a lug-boat captain, who became his wife Aug. 2. Eloped to Sudbury. The couple secretly crazed by pain, leaped or fell overboard from the speeding boat bearing him to hospital.

Wife Draws Launch

The 20-year-old bride, despite her injuries, dcoys the 28-foot launch across part of Bad Bay, over deep-water between Kagawong and Little Current. With her were Lloyd, not, injured internally; Frank Valiquette, the second camp worker, and Bryant's wife, who was working in the kitchen of the Dodge cottage at the time of the explosion.

When the craft docked here Mrs. Dodge and Bryant were taken by ambulance to Manitoulin General Hospital, nearly 30 miles distant in the heart of Manitoulin Island. The 21-year-old Valiquette, his body a mass of powder burns, aid and assisted fisherwomen in the location of the spot, where Dodge went down after entering hospital.

Bryant and Mrs. Dodge, injured about the arms and legs, were operated upon late last night. Attending physicians said the extent of the bride's courage. "She never whimpered or complained when I worked on her," said Dr. C. R. Young. Mrs. Dodge will recover but little hope was held for Bryant.

9 Million Trust Fund

Besides the property of a trust fund of more than $6,000,000, was the least spectacular of the many extravagances of his extravagances of his sister, Frances, who inherited the bulk of the huge estate six years ago, for years have made society page history. Among them was the chief pleasure in tinkering with airplanes and speedboat motors.

Dodge, Detroit, Mich., set up an automobile shop in Detroit with his brother Horace. The "shop" was sold before the depression for $140,000,000. The cheque for the same was said to be the largest ever written in a private business transaction. Both men lost and their fortunes were divided equally between the two families.

Honeymoon in Trailer

The marriage of Danny and Capt. Angus MacDonald's daughter took place at the Rochester Mich., estate of the bridegroom's mother. The couple honeymooned for more than a year that they were engaged. Their first part of their honeymoon in an automobile trailer touring Northern Ontario.

Mr. and Mrs. Dodge arrived at the summer camp a week ago. For some months the Dodge family's vacation trips to the north the $15-a-week telephone operator was seen with the young millionaire in and about the hamlet of Gore Bay, 45 miles west of here and the waters, where they planned to centre their honeymoon, the explosion occurred at 4 p.m. E.S.T. It happened so quickly Dodge did not have time to throw

Why the Weather?

By A. H. Thiesen
Science Service Meteorologist

Weather and the barometer! Let us but look no more than in the words "fair", "stormy" and others found on somewhat barometers. These may be perfectly good indicators in some weather conditions and not with others. The legends apply best, if not only, to the weather at sea-level stations. They will not apply at higher levels without modification, as we to do so. This is because as one gets higher the mean level pressure becomes less, but the weather would not necessarily change. Barometers are excellent weather instruments, but their chief use is mean its most should be studied in connection with the weather

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Aug. 16.—(CP)— The weather has been decidedly warm in Ontario and Quebec and comparatively cool in the western provinces. Showers and thunderstorms have occurred in all provinces.

Lake Superior: Moderate east to southeast winds; mostly cloudy tonight and Wednesday with occasional showers; not much change in temperature.

MODERN POULTRY HOUSE, STOCKED, GIFT TO YOUTH

Can. Nat. Institute For Blind to Make Sighted Boy Self-Supporting

TO LEARN BRAILLE

Happy Sequel to Unique Incident on Street Few Months Ago

No longer will John J. Crawford, blind Lonsdale youth have to face life with the knowledge that he is entirely dependent upon others for his livelihood. No longer will this young man, whose case was accidentally discovered a few months ago by Inspector Frank Gariner, Ontario Provincial Police, following a unique incident on Front Street in which the young man accidentally jostled a young lady on the thoroughfare, be a lonely way imbued with the idea that he is a drain upon society.

Today the young man wears a smiling countenance, and his family who live at Lonsdale, are uttering heartfelt thanks to an organization whose aim also is to create a better environment for the sightless, and assist him in securing means of livelihood that will not only make him self-supporting, but change his outlook on the road ahead from the somber hues of despair to the rose shades of a life of usefulness.

New Life Opens at Lonsdale Boy

For the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, Toronto, through the untiring efforts of Mr. Alfred W. Sparks, Field Secretary for this district, with headquarters in Belleville, has opened a new vista of life for the sightless young man. Thorough investigation of the facts of the case by officials of the Institute has resulted in negotiations, that are now under way, for the construction of a modern building to house a large flock of thoroughbred chickens, near the home of Crawford at Lonsdale.

The building will be equipped with intensive chicken rails, found by government experts to be the most scientific method to egg production. Built of cement the building will contain modern designs that will facilitate feeding, cleaning and gathering of eggs for John Crawford and he will be given full charge of the building and its operation as soon as it is completed.

Specialties in Poultry

The Canadian National Institute for the Blind, has made an extensive study of poultry for a considerable length of time. Mr. Sparks told the Ontario Intelligencer this morning. They consider it a means of not only providing employment for blind persons, but to provide for them suitable and profitable income.

"Crawford," Mr. Sparks said, "is much interested in the proposition and feels that with proper management and operation, this new venture should be a well paying one. He will continue to receive full co-operation and advice from the Placement Department of the Institute until he is on his own feet. Then he will be left alone, and everything necessary to successful poultry raising will furnish him, by the Institute, at no cost to himself, in the form of a loan to enterprise a self-supporting one."

Belleville Citizens Interested

Mr. Sparks also made it clear to report to the citizens of Belleville who are known such an interest in his case that Crawford should soon be on the road to success," he continued. "This will be within the next few days, a teacher who will instruct Crawford in reading and writing of Braille will arrive at Lonsdale to give him instructions in order that he can read and write as well as make out his own reports for his new venture."

The decision to place Crawford in charge of this new venture was the result of thorough investigation of the case by Mr. Sparks who with Mr. L. G. Williamson, employment supervisor of the National Institute for the Blind spent yesterday in Belleville in further study of the case. In view of the fact that Crawford has lived on the farm all his life, and was conversant to some extent with many problems that would arise, it was decided to erect the chicken house in that it would not remove Crawford from his life-long environment.

Will Be Success

Commenting on the case, Mr. Sparks ventured the opinion that the new venture could not help but be a success. The eggs, he stated, would be of the highest quality, due to the opportunity for feeding the chickens individually. At the end of the season, table birds of the better quality would be available for the market. Non-layers could easily be distinguished and killed for market to make room for chickens of production. The entertaining bright outlook for Crawford, who a few months ago, was unknown, and facing a life of despair, has filled the void of hope. That has all been changed, thanks to the efforts of the Canadian Institute for the Blind, that yearly, unheralded and unsung, helps hundreds of these less fortunate people to a position of usefulness and independence.

BARN IS STRUCK AND DESTROYED

Contents, Fowls And Milk House Also Lost in Huntingdon Tp.

West Huntingdon, August 16.—(Special) — As owner and neighbors stood by helpless to aid, a large frame barn of Sydenham Lawrence Morgan on his farm on the 9th concession of Huntingdon Township one mile west of Ivanhoe Station, was completely destroyed by fire shortly before six o'clock last evening, after a lightning bolt had struck the gable, igniting the structure.

The season's crop of grain, 100 hens and a milk house were destroyed by the fire.

Hurrying to get in the last load of grain before the threatening rain arrived Lawrence and his brother had just reached the barn when the bolt struck. Instantly, as if completely dried by the lightning, the upper section of the barn burst into flames.

Efforts of neighbors in saving a stack of hay nearby the burning barn were successful, but a stack of other stock was suffered because of the fact cows were in the pasture and the horses were working.

It is believed insurance will cover the greater part of the loss.

TRUCK-DRIVING JOBS PREFERRED

This is Preference Expressed in Belleville District by Jobless

What Job is apparently most desired by unemployed of the city? That of driving a motor truck or transport, it is revealed by statements of those registered for work at the city relief office.

For some reason the majority of them prefer to drive a truck instead of decided preference for driving either a truck or transport." It was stated at the office. "Most of them have the idea that this work must be very easy and we willing to take a chance at it."

This season few requests for men to fill jobs in the city or rural districts have been received at the office, and few positions have so far been filled from this bureau.

Dear Sir:

Further our discussion this morning regarding further investigations in connection with the flood, I report that I have started, in the afternoons to make a complete survey of the Bridge Street, from the railroad bridge as far north as Corbyville.

The work was started today by making preliminary measurements from the west end of the river prior to the taking of levels to cross sections. These levels were will be continue during agreeable weather so that the plan will be completed by the middle of October.

Re: Parking Lots

Dear Sir:

For your information, I wish to report that practically all the work which was outlined for the parking areas along the east side of the Moira River and also at the rear of the St. Charles property has been completed. There were also ten new parking signs ordered and they have all been put in place with the exception of six which will be erected this week on the Domenico property. More cinders have been drawn to level up several of the low spots and also to level a small area at the rear of McPee's Jewellery Store which is being used for parking purposes. The ramp between the Domenico property and the Belleville Hotel property has been graded again with cinders, as well as filling in the floor of the parking shed, now built for Domenico. There are still about ten cars stored to be put in p'ace along the river bank for the protection of the public directly opposite Hyde's garage.

These few details will all be taken care of this week and this will complete the work in the parking lots which was appropriated for.

Yours truly,
CHAS. A. MOTT.
City Engineer.

FAIR ENTRIES CLOSE

JAMES BARLOW, C. N. ENGINEER, IN RETIREMENT

Served 43 Years, Entering The Service in 1895

LIVES IN CITY

Few people paid attention to the tall, grey-haired railroad engineer as he stepped from the cab of his locomotive last week.

Beyond a cursory glance at his beloved "iron horse" there was no outward indication that he was saying good-bye to the thing to which he devoted a lifetime of faithful and efficient service.

For James Barlow 312 Charles Street one of the most popular engineers that ever pulled a throttle of a locomotive in the Belleville division of the Canadian National Railways, in that quiet gesture, said farewell to his environment, and entered a period of retirement that his years of service to the public and his company has well merited.

It marked the end of forty-three years of service, during which the safety of thousands of lives had been entrusted to his care.

Started as Cleaner

In 1895 Mr. Barlow then a youth of 22 summers donned his overalls and started his first job on the Iron Road as a wiper. Quietly efficiently he carried out his duties. Three years later he was rewarded when he was classified as a fireman. Again his application to the job at hand stood him in good stead and a few years later he realised his ambition, when he was given charge of a locomotive and was classed a full-fledged engineer.

From that date until a few days ago the familiar figure of Jim Barlow has been identified with the Belleville Division. Regularly he took his trains out and regularly he came back. To Toronto and other points valuable cargoes and passenger trains routed to their destination under the skilled hands of this efficient servant of the road will be active.

Now he is receiving his reward. But retirement does not necessarily mean inactivity. Interviewed yesterday, Mr. Barlow stated that he had no intention of moving from the city in which he has spent the best years of his life. Nor has he any intention of settling down to a life of idleness.

"There is plenty of work to do around the place," he said. "I have my garden and there are several other things here that will keep me busy. I never felt better in my life, but I will do if I have to live a life of doing nothing."

Shhh! She's teaching him how thorough a Thoroughbred can be!

A freak electrical storm at Marmora this week resulted in the electrocution of four broadcloth shirts owned by a Marmora business man. The sudden bolt burned the tails off the shirts as they hung on the clothes line.

The maid had just washed the shirts and hung them out to dry, pinning them in the approved fashion on the wire clothes line when a brief storm struck the district. A ragged streak of blue lightning from the storm cloud hit the wire line, set the shirts afire and dropped them to the ground where they were extinguished by the following rain. They were salvaged minus a considerable portion of their tails.

ROTHERMERE AND STEED DISPUTE ON CZECH ISSUE

Former Editor Attacks Article on European Situation

BRITAIN AND GERMANY

BY PAT USSHER
Canadian Press Staff Writer
London, Aug. 16.—(CP—Cable)—A charge that Lord Rothmere, in encouraging Germany to attack Czechoslovakia was one of the highlights of an exchange of correspondence made public between the newspaper-peer and Wickham Steed, former editor of the Times.

Mr. Steed fired the first shot in a letter dated July 18, asserting that an article by Lord Rothermere in his Daily Mail of the same date was "based on misleading information and may help to bring on an European war, into which Great Britain would be drawn willynilly."

Czechoslovakia "Is Monstrosity"

Lord Rothermere, replying, called Czechoslovakia a "monstrosity of a country" and contended that some of the Empire would declare neutrality if Britain went to war over the central European issue.

The Rothermere article had warned that if the Czech minority question was not settled to the complete satisfaction of Germany by the end of September, no astute observer in Europe "would consider Czech independence to be worth three months' purchase."

Mr. Steed in his letter remarked: "Why not add a few words about the defence of this country by encouraging Germany to attack it if possible obliterate Czechoslovakia is a mystery to me."

Reckoning With Britain

Chancellor Hitler would require at least 1,000 airplanes and 3,000,000 men to crush Czechoslovakia quickly, Mr. Steed went on. Warning that German domination of Central and Eastern Europe meant was "an indispensable preliminary to a final reckoning with Britain and the British Empire," Mr. Steed declared: "These airplanes and these men would be available against Great Britain and France were Czechoslovakia overthrown."

Replying on Aug. 3, Lord Rothermere wrote:—"The more the truth about the monstrosity of a country (Czechoslovakia) becomes known, the less enthusiasm there is that the British people will allow their government to associate itself directly or indirectly in its affairs.

"The day Great Britain goes to war in pursuit of some aim or design in Central Europe, two or three of our most important Dominions will declare their neutrality and by doing so, bring an immediate end to the British Empire."

British Dominions Loyal

Mr. Steed charged Lord Rothermere's information about the Dominions was faulty. In a letter dated Aug. 6, Mr. Steed said:

"Their peoples would never approve of a British war 'in pursuit of some aim or design in Central Europe.'

"They would approve of, and support, resistance to an attack upon the defences of Great Britain and upon the essentials of British freedom. They would not in the last resort fear to fight for the principles upon which the British Commonwealth is 'based.'

Lord Rothermere retorted on Aug. 10:—

"If you or anyone else are so foolish as to believe Great Britain and her Dominions will fight for the Moscow-owned Prague Government, you are labouring under some strange delusion.

"Why should the people of London and Manchester be bombed to perpetuate the tyranny of the Czechs?"

TWO THOUSAND MILES BETWEEN ROTARY CLUBS

In Africa District Governor Makes Official Visits by Plane — Palestine Club Has Seventeen Nationalities But No Fights

District Governor Harry E. Hovey, of Geneva, N. Y., paid an official visit to Belleville Rotary Club, Monday, in the course of a two weeks' tour in Canada, which he is enjoying as a vacation and at the same time visiting the Rotary clubs in the 171st District, on this side of the line. Governor Hovey is accompanied by his wife, and during their stay in Belleville they made so many friends. Governor Hovey is a very likeable chap, head of a chain of 200 grocery stores in New York State, and an ardent Rotarian. In addressing the Rotary Club at noon Monday he pointed out the many ways of giving service to the community and the club, the prescription for a live, healthy club, and the far-flung chain of Rotary Clubs, linking up eighty countries, and all endeavoring to promote international fellowship and the principles of permanent peace.

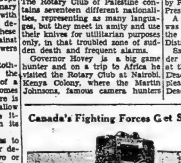
Instances of the growth and influence of Rotary round the world were given in interesting manner by Governor Hovey, including a description of the territory of one district Governor which includes Palestine, Egypt, the Soudan, Turkey, Persia, and a whole lot more. The Rotary Club of Palestine contains seventeen different nationalities, representing as many languages, but they meet in amity and use their knives for utilitarian purposes only, in that troubled zone of sudden death and frequent alarms.

Governor Hovey is a big game hunter and on a trip to Africa he attended the Rotary Club at Nairobi, Kenya Colony, where the Martin Johnsons, famous camera hunters and animal film producers, had their home. Nairobi Rotary Club has a membership of forty-four and a good regular attendance despite the fact that some of the members have to travel considerable distance to attend. They make up attendance at another club for the nearest club is two thousand miles away. The District Governor flew in Johannesburg, 3,000 miles to and from Nairobi, and makes his official visits by plane.

At a recent gathering of Rotary international officers at Delmonte, California, one of the delegates was Baron DeVille, of Sweden, who has been chosen as independent member of the commission which will arbitrate the differences existing in treaty between that country and Great Britain. The Baron is District Governor of an area which includes Palestine, Turkey, Egypt, the Soudan and Persia, and he speaks six languages fluently.

Referring to the Rotary International Convention recently held at San Francisco, the attendance was so cosmopolitan that the Mayor of that city said that while eighty nations were represented all but the delegates of three nations came across the ocean by ship.

Further evidence of good fellowship between nations was represented by the new international bridge to be opened this month across the St. Lawrence, a few miles east of Belleville, instead of building forts the people of the two countries were investing their money in bridges of good will.



Rotary grows well in any soil because it is founded upon the Golden Rule, and the belief that "He profits most who serves best", said the District Governor, whose earnest, active and apt counsel was deeply appreciated by those present.

Rotary appreciation was voiced by Past President Fred Douglas and President Mack Haig.

A pleasing feature of the meeting was the presentation to Governor Hovey of the baby member, Lloyd Hicks, by the District Governor.

Sandy Burrows acted as song leader and Phil Huddleston presided at the piano. A vocal solo by Jack Deacon added materially to the pleasure of the proceedings. Jack Deacon acted as sergeant-at-arms.

Canada's Fighting Forces Get Some Modern Weapons

Practice for Canada's greatest peace-time army gets under way at Camp Borden, Ont. Over 1200 officers and men will participate in the actual games with every branch of the service taking part in coordination tests. Here Brig. W. H. P. Elkins inspects one of the two modern 16-ton British Vickers' army tanks which Canada recently bought and which had just reached camp. These fast-travelling armored fighting vehicles are of the latest type and are formidable weapons.

Men from various units of Canada's fighting forces, now training for Manoeuvres at Camp Borden, Ont., are shown, ABOVE being instructed by officers in use of the modern Bren machine-gun, now used by Britain's armies. It can be used in infantry machine-gun work or as an anti-aircraft gun.

QUINTS TO START SCHOOL SEPT. 1

Famous Five Will Only be Taught French at First

North Bay, Ont., Aug. 16 (CP)—The Dionne quintuplets will start school September 1, as soon as they recover from their current throat ailment, and their studies will be along lines drafted by Dr. Evan MacArthur, Ontario Deputy Minister of Education and approved by their father, Oliva Dionne.

Education plans were approved at a meeting yesterday of the guardians, Dionne, Dr. A. R. Pedlow and Judge J. A. Valin; and Hon. D. D. Conant, Ontario Attorney General, Hon. Colin Campbell, Ontario Public Works Minister, Dr. McArthur and Edmon Cloutihier of Ottawa, of the French Educational Association.

Miss Gaetane Verina of Ottawa, who will teach the quintuplets, will assume her duties September 1. Whether the children will be taught English or not was not announced, but earlier Mr. Dionne and Mr. Cloutihier said the five first, as they concurred with Dr. McArthur's plans, it was believed all instructions would be in French.

Prepared Statement

A prepared statement after the meeting reported the guardians and government officials had found Mrs. Oliva Callander home of the quintuplets was inadequate but that guardian care for the five headway has been made in a permanent solution of the problem of providing the family together again.

Discussions centred on whether the guardians' fund would or could be enlarged to provide room for the entire family, or whether a new home would be necessary.

Guardians will present their plans for the new home to Premier Wilson, official guardian for Ontario children, probably early next month before any action is taken.

Circus is Coming 'Lephants! Lions! Tigers! 'Neverything

"Big Top" Will be Pitched at Belleville Fair—Public Will be Given Greatest Entertainment Ever

Since Ringling Bros. disappointed the public by not appearing here, the Board of Directors of the Belleville Fair thought it would be something unusual and tremendous to bring another circus to the City. They have gone to considerable expense this year to build up the Fair in every department, as will be evident more so on the Grandstand attractions.

They have contracted with the Canadian Vaudeville Exchange here Toronto to furnish the Garden Bros. Circus as a grandstand performance. This is the Circus which played last Easter week at the Exhibition Coliseum in Toronto, under the auspices of the Firemen, and which has since been touring under canvas. They will arrive here with their Big Top, 'Lindy' the Elephant, horses, ponies, dogs, monkies, and 5 large Nubian Lions, besides the clowns, acrobats, trapeze artists, etc. etc.

The performance will be given once each night in front of the Grandstand, in the open air, at the usual Grandstand prices — but this time any Circus has played at such low prices. A complete Circus performance will be given on the opening afternoon for the benefit of the children, at special prices.

Besides the Grandstand performance, the Circus Big Top will be set up opposite the Grandstand Entrance, which will be used as both the big Side Show and Menagerie, and which can be visited any time during the day or evening.

All in all, this is an attraction extraordinary, and as set to harness the opportunity of witnessing a real Circus, you may also win a brand new Automobile. This year the Fair Board are to be congratulated on their progressive ideas and merit the support of the entire district in their efforts to build your Fair into a really top-notch event!

An enjoyable evening was spent at Birch Cliff, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Mowbray's cottage on Wednesday on Friday evening by members of Birch Creek Tuffies Band and Tweed United Church Choir. The band, under bandmaster Reg. Wilson, gave a programme of band concertoes, interspersed with community singing, led by Mr. S. Cook, choir leader of the choir. Later in the evening the host and hostess served weiners and coffee. A vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Gordon was heartily applauded by the guests who had enjoyed similar evenings at Birch Cliff in previous years.

At Tweed Council meeting a proposal was made by Councillor C. H. Kerr that a deputation be sent to interview the Provincial Department of Highways regarding the disposition of several houses on North Victoria Street near the western end of the new bridge over the Moira river. Councillor Kerr expressed the opinion that the Department would view favourably a suggestion that the houses be moved back nearer to the rear of the lots on which they are at present located. After some discussion a motion to this effect was passed.

Burr's

Burr's Ladie's Aid

Burr's— Burr's Ladies' Aid met on Thursday afternoon at Sunny Side Farm, the home of Mrs. Geo. Tew, with an attendance of 20 members and nine visitors.

The president, Mrs. Ewart Harnes, opened the meeting with a hymn. The 91 Psalm was read and all repeated the Lord's Prayer. The roll call was responded to with a verse of Scripture containing the word "patience" and it was decided to answer next roll call by telling what work we had done best. The theme song was then sung.

A discussion followed about entertaining Crofton and Melville societies. A hymn followed and the business part of the meeting closed by a verse of Psalm 19.

Mrs. Gene Hubbs gave a reading; Mrs. Norman Fox read a poem; Mrs. George Fox told of the early Jesuit Missionaries in Japan in 1563. Later these Jesuits were murdered and their churches laid in ruins. Japan shut herself up for 230 and allowed no foreigners to enter her port. Then in 1856 she opened her doors again to foreigners. Sir John Bowring was crossing the China Sea to Yokohama when he beheld one of the ruined churches, a cross still standing gleaming in the setting sun like burnished gold and he was inspired to write the hymn, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory."

Lunch was then served by the hostess and her assistants.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Bowers and family, Fish Lake, Mr. and Mrs. Elson Aulthouse and family, West Lake, visited their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bowers, on Sunday.

Mrs. Murney Parks spent Thursday afternoon with her mother, Mrs. P. W. Bovay, Crofton.

Burr's Ladie's Aid and Consecon Ladie's Aid were entertained by Ameliaburg W. A. on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Frank Lent, Belleville, District President of the W. A. was the guest speaker. After a choice program a delicious lunch was served in their new dining hall.

HONOR FOR POET'S WIFE

Poet laureate John Masefield has paid one of the most graceful tributes which a man can pay to his spouse, an honour which by the way, could come only, to few, he has endowed a seat in her name in the British National Theatre, which is being dedicated to Shakespeare. Mrs. Masefield ,though not a playwright nor writter, has been the laureate's constant collaborator and has helped him produce many plays. Whereas others have been endowing seats in the theatre in the name of the great figures of English drama and stage, Masefield names his wife.

Mrs. Masefield will therefore be numbered for all time with the notables of the English drama and the stage, Kit Marlowe, Ben Jonson, Shakespeare himself, and other greatnesses in literature of the theatre. John Masefield himself is one of the great figures of the English stage today. He writes largely in the poetic drama which is not so popular but he has made a name in this field as well as in poetry itself.

A glorious company of men and women this theatre will perpetuate; such men as stand above all others as Beaumont and Fletcher and the great actors of the reign of Elizabeth and subsequent reigns down to the time of Mrs. Siddons, McCready, Sir Henry Irving and others so numerous in the honour roll of British dramatic literature and acting. Even today there has been writing and acting a great company of men and women who have not let the standard of British drama fall. In that company is the poet laureate himself, John Masefield.

This noble company whether as playwrights, producers or actors has upheld the traditions of the British stage, all acknowledging the supremacy of the English man who is the greatest of them all: William Shakespeare, who into a little more than twenty years crowded an entire civilization in his studies of human character and in his ageless poetry. To his name this theatre will be dedicated.

Mr. Masefield's gracious tribute to his wife is what readers of his poetry and drama and other works might expect of a man who possesses himself so many of the finest graces which go to make the man who has earned the laurel crown. It is a tribute to a happy life of companionship and of kindred ideals in the marriage of true personalities whose course is as fundamental as life and nature.

RESEARCH GOES ON

In the heart of Rome, not far from the spot where the mighty Julius Caesar lived and died, is a great memorial of the day of the emperors which followed Julius. It is the Colosseum, open to the world, yet it has contained secrets hidden from everyone, even the inhabitants of Rome itself, for hundreds and passed through many vicissitudes from the time of its foundation. Just now in Mussolini's day there is a gigantic undertaking—the opening up of the subterranean tunnels and rooms which have been covered for many centuries. They will be studied by archeologists.

Ancient Rome, that is buried, was the centre of the world for a long period of time, which saw many changes and kingdoms come and pass away. Rome was one of the great empires of the ancient world and the only one which exerts sway in the modern world. Empires of the east which in the days before the birth of Christ held sway, never had the potency of the Roman Empire ever so long a period of time nor kept themselves before the world so long. Rome of course was particularly well fitted for the role and she came in an age when a new world now known as Europe, was being opened up.

Today more than ordinary interest is being displayed in history not only of the present but of the past, because of what may be learned from the past as lessons for the present. Ancient Rome was of a different race. Her diplomacy and policy for centuries make interesting study and may offer suggestions as to the future of present civilization, which is something quite different from that of pagan and even early Christian Rome. Up to a year of two ago the world believed mankind was growing better, that man sought more humane methods in dealing with men and nations, but this is also a year in which new arsenals have been placed in man's hands, new things, the final influence of which on life and nations, and on the character of man and woman is yet to be proven. Believers in human nature are confident that man will triumph over the tools and mechahism he has won and that nations will in the long run see nothing but disaster in the misuse of these implements and powers been minds have extracted from the vaults of nature.

Money spent on archeological discovery is not lost. The story of the Bible books is and a new conception of the life of the nation and of the factors entering into the national Jewish outlook in Biblical days is being dug out of the soil and refuse of the mounds which mark what were once ancient cities of the Holy Land. Neither are the finds of ancient history in Rome valueless. Discoveries in Britain are likewise of importance in widening the scope and interest of life, past and present, for this knowledge may be a guide to life in the days to be.

THE WEATHER

Malcolm died, but there was Malcolm's son;
And what, the County asked, would save the farm
Left in the hands of one whose work was done
While yet the rocks in pasture still were warm?

One who was known to house his plough
Anyway
After the planting, and with hay cocked high
Drove fork and cutter down the stubbled clay
To shelter iron from the wind and sky?
One who set stone to wall where stone was crops
And bound with plaster where but stone would do,
And prodded apple roots and clipped the tops,
And played a fiddle when the day was through?

Young Malcolm laughed, though not for laugh's sake.

EGYPT SUFFERED MANY PLAGUES OF FLIES AND FROGS and sudden deaths of children, and other calamities before letting the Children of Israel, prisoners of the Egyptians, go. The Children of Israel constituted a substantial asset to Egypt as slaves, but they became a liability when a prophet arose and promised to lead them to the Promised Land. This prophet, a man named Moses, convinced the Egyptians that they would be better off without the Israelites, and they chased them out in a hurry. Then the Egyptians changed their minds and they found that someone had to do the work, the brickmaking, the shovelling, the planting, and the reaping —and they just naturally changed their minds and set out hotfoot after their former slaves. Moses, the Israelites relates, caused the waters of the Red Sea to divide and let the Children of Israel through in safety to the other side. The Egyptians followed pell mell and were caught by the returning waters and drowned. The Children of Israel made a lot of trouble, for Moses, the usual agitators being in the ranks, making trouble, until the people thought they knew more than did Moses and got out of hand with the result they spent forty years in the wilderness. Moses got so darn mad with the bunch that he lost his temper and lost his chance to enter the Promised Land at the head of his followers. History is being repeated—Egypt, the Israel of the past, is the scene of Germany and Austria and they are looking for a Promised Land and a Moses to lead them out of Egypt and the Wilderness.

JIMMIE ROOSEVELT, SON OF THE PRESIDENT, is considerably peeved over an article which appeared in a magazine accusing him of having an income up to two million dollars a year, derived from commissions upon insurance placed by him—presumably because he was the president's son. Jimmie, in rebuttal, presents photographs of his income tax returns for the past few years showing a peak of less than fifty thousand dollars a year. That establishes the fact Jimmie was willing to pay taxes on, and a great many people would be only too happy to pay taxes on such an income. Jimmie says being a president's son did not help him much, and in fact helped to make him lose some sales. Jimmie has retired from the insurance game and is now his father's secretary—a steady job, while it lasts, and most interesting. The writer of the article accusing Jimmie of an income of two million dollars a year needn't feel bad, for Jimmie would have made that much, if he could, President's son or no—and we suspect what he is peeved at mainly is the fact that he didn't make the income he was given credit for in this magazine article. However, Jimmie received a lot of free advertising, besides, no doubt, getting paid for his rebuttal article, published by Collier's.

Maskinonge fishing in Mosquito Bay is only beginning to be interesting. Dr. A. N. Reid discovered the bed, the luck has been the greatest ever known in northern waters. Yesterday afternoon Mr. H. K. Smith and Mr. Henry Leavens went down in Mr. Smith's steam launch, the Scout, to their luck. Mr. Smith caught two maskinonge, the largest measuring 4 ft. 1-2 inches by 31 1-2 inches in circumference and weighed 31 1-2 pounds. When it was opened in Mr. William Black's fish market a fresh pike measuring 28 inches and weighing 2 1-2 pounds was taken from its maw. The second in size was caught by Mr. Henry Leavens and weighed 30 pounds; the third weighed 8 pounds. Mr. A. F. Reid also caught a 15 pound maskinonge at the same place yesterday. The number and size of the fish caught during all the season has no fish stories—as they have all been brought in by city and country persons have seen them.

AUTO OWNERS PAY

After paying all other taxes required of them as citizens, automobile users in this country were required last year to contribute more than one and a half billion dollars in special taxes for the privilege of owning and operating their cars.

Virtually every penny that goes into the making of a car is taxed before it reaches the assembly line and those taxes are pyramided into the cost of the car.

The purchaser then has to pay a sales tax on the finished car and a license fee to operate it on the highways.

And finally he has to pay taxes on the oil and gasoline to run it.

The worst part of this outrageous tax load automobile users is that it falls largely on people of little means.

The farmer who uses his car to get to and from town, and the wage-earner who rides to and from the factory, are the ones who feel the burden of it most.

The rich can take care of themselves.

The poor should get the breaks.

And yet in the excessive taxation of motor vehicles it is they who today have to take the rap.—Detroit Free Press

BRAIN vs BRAWN

It is announced from Berlin that students taking examinations for all German universities must:

Be able to run two miles in 15 minutes; jump 13 feet six inches; throw a 16 1-2 weight eight yards, and swim 54 yards, unassisted, in 60 seconds.

Imagine a Goethe up against a physical test of that description, or a Handel or a Beethoven . . .

Or, knuckle of at Shakespeare, fancy imposing those 'matriculation' conditions upon two of their own prominent authors, the ponderous Goering or the crippled Goebbels!

But that, of course, is the absolute essence of Nazi-ism: not what its leaders could or should do, but what the rank-and-file must do.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton M.D.

12th Commandment of Good Posture

I speak often about good posture —erect position of the body whether standing or sitting—because of its value both physical and mental.

The erect carriage of the body means that the shoulders are well back and the chest well forward, giving the lungs plenty of room to expand, and preventing any crowding or pressure on the heart. With the lungs, drawing in the pure air and, what is more important, breathing out the impure air, the blood, pumped by a heart free from pressure, will carry more nourishment to and more wastes from every cell in the body. The body is fast as strong or safe as its weakest distant from the heart.

The erect position calls also for a drawing in (or backwards) of the abdomen and the development of the abdominal muscles by keeping the abdomen drawn in or back holds the abdominal muscles in their proper positions, thus aiding digestion and preventing constipation.

Dr. Ralph Lewis, Director of the Clinical Medicine and Surgery, gives Ten Commandments of Good Posture.

1—Stand tall.

2—Head high.

3—Walk tall and 'chesty', with weight on the balls of the feet, not on the heels or any other part of the feet.

4—Draw in the abdomen pulling in the muscles at the sides.

5—Keep the shoulders high and square.

6—Pull the chin downward toward the collar button.

7—Increase the hollow of the back by rolling the hip bones downward and forward.

8—Separate the shoulders from the hips as far as possible. Do this by raising shoulders, not by pulling or raising shoulders.

9—Lift the head flat. (Don't overdo this as having elbows and knees very slightly bent helps to relax the body and invites sleep.)

10.—Think tall.

Dr. Lewis suggestion I would add to these 2 two to three minutes exercise twice daily in developing the abdominal muscles. The exercises are (a) trying to touch the toes with fingers, keeping knees stiff, trying do back ,raise both legs (with knees straight) to a right angle with the body, repeating the two slow of a square. Trying to touch toes with the fingers at first and gradually increased to 20 times; raising legs (one only at first if too difficult) from the floor and 10 times gradually increasing to 12 times.

IN THE MIND

Since everybody else seems to be talking about the weather, I'll join in here goes.

Whether it is decent to wear few clothes in summer seems to us to depend chiefly upon the mind of the wearer.

If a person strips to the limit in Rochester shirts, the degree of protection of decent taste unquestionably is involved.

But while exhibitionism may not necessarily be immoral, it is vulgar and unpardonably so.

But if a person uninimized clothes in order to be comfortable good taste requires that he shall not parade of enervating weather, be conspicuous by violence of his thinks he it. It's in the point of view.

After all, when God made us he made us naked. He made no clothes at all.

And, of course, in selecting summer costumes, questions of good judgment, environment and prudence have to be considered.—Rochester Times.—Detroit Free Press.

HONOR MR. BELL

At Kemptville recently a portrait of Professor W. J. Bell, first principal and for more than seventeen years Head of the Agricultural School, was unveiled in the presence of a representative company. It is fitting that the name of Mr. Bell died but his memory has not faded from the minds of those who were associated with him. But with the passing of the years pictorial pictures tend to become blurred and the lifeless portrait will serve as a beautiful link that can happen to any one: a majestic sunset or moonrise; the stars on a clear night; the sound of a bird in song; the perfection of a flower; a song, a story, a vibrant human voice; the making of a useful thing; an understanding look in another person's eyes; the feeling of friendship; the sense of a destiny shared with others; the satisfaction of not being utterly alone, even in the loneliest of worlds. Men have been crucified for less and cheerfulness to the last, even in the grip of painful and terrifying disease.

Risking one's life deliberately because one believes that the ideal is worth while; or because one's self-respect demands it; or because one is too proud to run; or because one is too stubborn to admit defeat; or because one is too tired to care; or because one is too tired to care; or because one is too tired to care

Weddings

BELL—SILLS

St. Thomas' Anglican Church, Huron Street, Toronto, was the setting for a pretty wedding this afternoon at four o'clock, when Miss Doris Estelle Sills, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Sills was married to Mr. John Francis Bell, Toronto, son of Mr Neel H. Bell and the late Mrs. Bell of Burnham-on-Sea, Somerset, England. Rev. W. A. Lyndon-Smith officiated and the wedding music was played by Mr. A. E. Clarke.

The bride, whose father gave her in marriage, wore an effective gown of blush pink chantilly lace, with jacket, and matching cap and veil, and carried a bouquet of Premier roses and white sweet peas. The maid of honor, Miss Beale Vanderwater, was in pale pink chiffon with pink picture hat and carried pink and mauve sweet peas. Mr. Carl D. Sills of Belleville, cousin of the bride, was groomsman.

The reception afterward was held at the home of the bride's parents on Macpherson Avenue, where Mrs. Sills received her guests wearing a graceful gown of white sheer chiffon with pale blue floral design, corsage of deep red roses and white and blue accessories. Later the couple left for a trip to Detroit, the bride travelling in a cedar shantrock and bolero, with matching hat, burgundy accessories and corsage of deep red roses. On their return they will live in Toronto.

WHITE—WILLIAMS

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Williams of Picton, was the scene of a wedding Saturday, August 13, at high noon, when their daughter Edith Frances Helen, became the bride of Gerald L. White of Toronto, son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. White of Heathcote.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore her mother's wedding gown, of ivory satin with short train and made on princess lines, with yoke of baby Irish lace. Her tulle veil was that worn by her grandmother on a similar occasion, and was caught with orange blossoms. She carried Briarcliffe roses.

Miss Fannie Williams of Hamilton, was her sister's maid of honor, wearing pink taffeta, and carrying a nosegay of pink roses and blue cornflowers. Miss Margaret Hubbs of Vancouver, B.C., in orchid flowered chiffon, and Miss Eleanor Williams, Picton, in pink and mauve chiffon, were bridesmaids, and each carried an old-fashioned nosegay of sweet peas.- All attendants wore shoes in their shade. Mr. Arnold Anderson was groomsman. The wedding music was played by Miss Florence Barber, who also sang following the ceremony. Rev. David Wyan of the United Church conducted the ceremony, with an arch of hydrangeas, easter and stocks and tall standards of gladioli making a background for the wedding party.

A buffet luncheon was served, the attendants being Miss Enid Grimmon, Miss Helen Wooton, Miss Marion Huff, Miss Karie MacVannell and Miss Beatrice Huff. Mrs. Williams, mother of the bride, wore a lace gown of delphinium blue over taffeta, with shoulder bouquet of roses, and Mrs. White, mother of the bridegroom, was in mauve chiffon with similar flowers. Later, Mr. and Mrs. White left by motor for Manitoulin Island, going by way of Sudbury. On their return they will reside in Toronto.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were Miss Sophia Fox, Belleville.

PRESENTATION

On Thursday evening, Aug. 11th, the members of the S. S. No. 12 gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Walsh, Lonsdale, to tender to their daughter, Kay, a surprise party in the form of a Grocery Shower.

A book was passed in which each lady wrote her favorite recipe for the bride-to-be.

Music and singing enjoyed till eleven o'clock when the gathering was called to order and the following address was read by Miss Mary Williams, during which a gaily decorated basket piled high with groceries was carried in by Misses. Fred Brennan and Pat. Farrell.

Lonsdale, Ontario,
August 11th., 1938.

Miss Kathleen Walsh:
Dear Kay:

The neighbors declare Hi
The clergy has said
That a young lad and maiden
Are soon to be wed.

This evening your friends
Have all gathered here
The maidens and ladies
To wish you good cheer.

We trust that your future
Will always be bright
Your path will be gay
Your troubles be light.

Now if shadow should come
Just whistle and sing
It will make the shadow vanish
And much brightness bring.

Kay be to Tom
A kind trusting wife
Then he will love you
The rest of your life.

Now on this occasion
We have brought you tonight
Tea, coffee and sugar
To add to your mite.

We hope you will like them
That useful they'll be
Also serve to remind you
Of friends, one, two, three.

Please kindly unwrap them
And display openly
And watch with delight
As each piece you untie.

Signed on behalf of the members of S. S. No. 12.

Although taken completely by surprise the bride-to-be made an appropriate reply, thanking all for their gifts and inviting them to her new Home on the Second Concession.

Gifts were also presented by some girl friends from Marysford.

All joined in singing "For They are Jolly Good Fellows," after which a dainty lunch was served by the ladies. The gathering dispersed about 12.30, all wishing the bride-to-be many happy years of wedded life.

ROSLIN GUILD

The Women's Guild of St. Paul's Church, Roslin, enjoyed a picnic dinner along the river bank at Mr. Percy Sayers, on Wednesday, August 10th.

After the dinner the regular monthly meeting along with a list of sports was to have taken place, but owing to the rain coming on, Mrs. R. Copeland invited all to return to her home, when the meeting was held with the president opening the meeting in the usual manner. After the business period and meeting closed the rest of the afternoon was spent in games, everyone enjoying themselves. A shoe race by the women caused much amusement, Mrs. B. Cochins winning the prize. A bean contest was won by Mr. B. Cochins and Mrs. John Hart guessing the nearest number in the bottle. Treats had been provided for everyone and these were enjoyed. The gathering broke up about 4.30. A vote of thanks was given Mrs. Copeland for opening her home for the after-

You Answer Your Hostess' Invitation

Let's say that (as we suggested yesterday) your hostess has written you a delightfully hospitable invitation to visit her and has definitely told you the time you are expected, the plans she has made for your visit and, therefore, the clothes that you will be expected to bring and the time you are to leave.

This invitation must be answered promptly, either the day it is received, or the next day. You should, of course, not make it necessary for the hostess to hold up any other plans that she may wish to make if you find it impossible to accept her invitation.

Your note of acceptance of her invitation should be gracious and appreciative, of course, but it should also reflect her definiteness, so that there will be no misunderstanding. It might read something like this:

Dear Mary:

How very kind of you to ask Tom and me to spend Labor Day weekend with you and your charming family. We are thrilled at the thought of coming! We will, as you suggest, take the 5:10 train to Tom has an early business appointment, and I have a committee meeting.

We are looking forward to swimming on your lovely beach, and Tom is bringing his golf clubs for that anticipated foursome with Jack and his friends. Thank you, too, for planning to take these two dance-addicts to the gala dance at the club!

Thank you, thank you, for asking us . . . and we can hardly wait for the Day. Dearest love to you both.

Affectionately,
Nancy

Post-Wedding Toast

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

After the church wedding—during the reception at a hotel—who should propose the toast to the bride and groom? Should the best man propose this toast, or should the man who gave her away (not her father in this case)?

P.

It is customary for the best man to propose the toast to the bride and groom, and it is the groom who responds to this toast, for his bride and himself. It would also be gallant for the man who is to present the bride in marriage to offer a toast to the couple, but this isn't necessary.

First Name

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We have a little girl two years of age, whose name is Mary Patricia. Now my problem is this: we find that we prefer her middle name and all our friends have the same preference. It seems to suit her better.

Please tell me if it would be proper for a girl to sign her name Patricia Young? I know it is proper for a man to use that form, but I would like to know if it would be proper for a girl to use it.

Mother

It is quite proper for a girl, as well as a boy, to use an initial for the first name. That is, if one likes initials. But to me initials seem quite meaningless adjuncts . . . . it seems so much wiser either to use the name or to drop it.

With these two lovely names, you certainly have an embarrassment of riches. I can well understand that Patricia might quit a certain personality better, Why not drop the first name and the initial? Your little daughter will probably eventually do this anyway if she is to be known as Patricia.

Permit a Young Girl To Have Boy Friends

Companionship of Opposite Sex Is Vital to Young; But it Should be Regulated

(By LISA GRENELLE)

ONE DAY Mrs. Brown wife of a chauffeur complained to the head mistress of Miss Calhoun's select school for young ladies that several students were "ogling" her husband.

The girls would wait for him at the open window according to Mrs. Brown sometimes indecently clad, sometimes dressed up "just to kill" with flowers about their hair."

"Nonsense"! the head mistress said with righteous dignity. "I don't believe a word of it, Mrs. Brown. You must have mistaken. The sort of young ladies I have here would not so far forget themselves."

"If you don't believe me Ma'am come see for yourself; that's all I ask. My husband's a good man and self-respectin', but you can't trust any man too far. And you want anything to happen now."

Saw For Herself

The head mistress hesitated protested again. Her young ladies all came from respectable conservative backgrounds. But in the end Miss Calhoun went to see for herself.

And she was amazed and horrified at what she saw. Mrs. Brown had in no way exaggerated. In fact it was worse than Mrs. Brown had given her to understand for under her very eyes Miss Calhoun saw her elegant young ladies first attract Mr. Brown with unseemly notes then drop him a note.

Miss Calhoun took steps— at once. The guilty young ladies were sent home and their parents told why. Precious privileges were removed from two conspirators and the rest were given a good talking to.

That would put a stop to it, Miss Calhoun felt sure. It did for a month or so. After that there probably would be other incidents, if not with the handsome chauffeur, then with a mailman, a plumber or a traveling salesman.

They're Women First

These might be sheltered, well bred young ladies, but they were young women first. And young women want young men, conservative background or strict head mistress notwithstanding.

And in dealing with this force of nature, there's nothing to do except to provide appropriate mate society at reasonably frequent intervals, properly chaperoned. It is Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Fifty-Fifty Dates

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The other day read a letter from a man in your column signed "Southerner". And it seemed this bird got an awful jolt because some of us were out with girls fifty-fifty. I suppose this paragon of chivalry has no one to consider but himself, and he is all right for him so snooty, if that's the case. But I'm educating a younger brother, and sending $50 a month to my mother who deserves every penny of it.

To do this, I have to eat a great many meals at the drug-store soda counter, and I'm plenty fed up with them too.

So, when one of the girls in our office proposes a fifty-fifty lark I'm mighty glad to accept. When I drive her car, I always pay for the gas. If she's buying the gas, I pay for the lunch. It's only fair, don't you think?

I go with another one, whose aunt has a jolly old farmhouse and I freeze the ice-cream, make myself generally useful over the week-end. These people are very unpretentious and accept me on my face value, and I don't feel disgraced either.

Yankee

It's a question of "When in Rome do as the Romans". And I believe if you look into the matter, you'll find there isn't any hard and fast rule about it. I've had, letters from very nice girls in Southern cities, who don't object to the fifty-fifty plan. They understand that when certain young men have obligations, they can't play the Prince. And vice versa. I've had letters from young men in New England who disapproved highly of the fifty-fifty plan.

It seems to me it's a question of individual choice, and responsibility to dependents.

Still More on the Fifty-Fifty Problem

Dear Miss Fairfax:

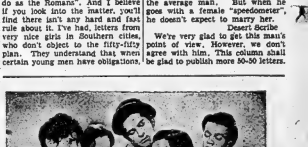
In your column the other day I read with interest letters from girls answering the date-less boys. One girl signed her letter "Sour Puss". I've got a hunch she told the truth then. A man who sits by his telephone and waits for girls to call him, in my opinion, doesn't deserve a date.

Five girls said they were a bit old-fashioned. I doubt if that is the reason they're date-less. Apparently their boy friends expect them to "chisel in" on the check, or else. That may be the fashion but I've never stuck to that level yet, and I'm still "in the swim". I know no word or phrase to describe men who expect women to pay their own way.

Another girl signed "Easy-on-the-eyes." But she gave the right answer when she said the evenings-on-the-sofa type is not popular with the average man. But when it goes with a female "speedometer", he doesn't expect to marry her.

Desert Scribe

We're very glad to get this man's point of view. However, we don't agree with him. This column shall be glad to publish more 50-50 letters.



She Entered England

Barred from England because of a quarantine of her "seeing-eye" dog, Babe, blind Hazel Hurst, remained aboard the ship on which she had left United States, prepared to return without setting foot in England when word was received that, through the intervention of Princess Marina, Duchess of Kent, she and her dog would be permitted to land. It was but an ephemeral visit, however, and this picture illustrates practically all of it. Hazel and her dog are seen walking on the pier, all they had time to do before the ship sailed again.

fense against married chauffeurs and such.

At a certain age, girl must have boy, boy must have girl. But if the right boys are made available, the girls will usually be content with them. Only very rarely does a girl who has been allowed a reasonable amount of freedom, a reasonable amount of access to appropriate male society, run away with a married man or others who

Yarn Weaves Into Style Picture

● These Blouses Show How Knitted Things Are Finding A Place In the Fashion Parade ●

By Alice Alden

Skeins of yarn are woven into the fashion picture nowadays, as knitted things loom large in the new fashion parade. Judging from the reports of smart shops, women never seem to have too many knitted clothes. Fine hand - knit and machine - knits so well done that they look like the m a t erpensive knitted things, are shown in all the shops.

And if you want to knit your own, you'll find plenty of professional help gratis. A knit blouse that can be worn with any suit is a useful affair. The model, below, is done in a smart diagonal design, with collar, sleeve tip and border in a simple garter stitch. It comes in lovely colors. Bellbess jacket blouses with zippers are nice for slim figure because of their sung fit. The above model is done in a zig-zag knit, with the design repeated on the front of the skirt. A nice color accent is given the blouse by using the contrasting color of the skirt for the narrow crocheted borders.

Undisciplined Children Are Nuisances While Little, Problem Cases When Adolescent, and From There Out Nobody Dares Predict

Here's a tale that should shame fond and foolish parents who fold their hands in resignation and confess that their children have them down. An interne in a large city hospital tells me that three-year-old diabetic babies have been taught to give themselves hypodermic injections of insulin; and that after getting the hang of it, they much prefer their own technique to that of doctors and nurses.

Quite as remarkable is his statement that children less than five years old have been trained to weigh their food regularly, counting calories and measuring grams like experts, never cheating, never giving themselves more food than their blood can tolerate.

How does that fall on the ears of adoring mother who giggles apologetically and says, "I know it's terrible for this child to sit up so late but she refuses to go to bed and I can't do a thing with her."

Or on the ears of the fond father who bellows at his baby son to stop making such a racket while son doesn't let up long enough to hear the order?

Of course there's something comical in the spectacle of a couple of husky adults, lashed to the mast by a surly-headed, club-by-faced bit of humanity. But it's tragic too; for the little one is missing the discipline that only his parents can give him and if they short change him, he's a nuisance while he's little, likely to be a problem child when he's adolescent and from there out nobody can predict with accuracy, though the gallows are usually mentioned as his destination by the grownups who have had a load of his insufferable manners.

One of the queerest things about it is that frequently these doting parents are sensible people, quick enough to see the mistakes their neighbors and friends are making in pampering and spoiling their children but absolutely blind to their own mistakes. When the neighbor's child gives his parents some slack jaw they are frank to say his neck should be wrung; yet when their darling answers back they revel with pride over his gift for repartee. When the visiting playmate grabs the biggest slice of cake he's a pig but when Junior reaches for it, he's showing signs of the go-getting spirit, which is what they wish to see.

Of course Junior hasn't got a chance to learn self-control. He's bound to grow up believing that the world revolves about him and that life is going to give him what his parents gave him: right of way. He's not going to study at school unless he has a taste for books. He's not going to be amenable to discipline unless he happens by accident on a teacher who has the knack of appealing to his better instincts.

The little diabetics who are being taught to give themselves hypodermics, count their calories and weigh their food will have a better chance in life than Junior, however fine a physical specimen he may be because they have learned what he hasn't—self-control through discipline.

Caroline Chatfield.

Problems of general interest submitted by readers will be discussed in this column. Letters unsuitable for publication will be answered personally provided they contain stamped, self-addressed envelopes. All mail is held in confidence. Write Miss Chatfield, in care of this newspaper.

Smart Suggestions For Streamlined Silhouette

By JULIET SHELBY
Central Press Canadian Writer

Frances Day, the young lovely who is said to bear strong resemblance to the late Jean Harlow, has beautiful long lashes, but she says she had to train them to grow.

Lashes for the screen must be long and silky and this type, for the average player, is applied with the rest of the makeup.

Garbo, however, and some of the other favored ones, have the luxuriant kind that requires no artificial aid.

"When I finally tried a number of things I found plain vaseline did the work. I rubbed on a little every day for a year and now my lashes are long and curl up to the ends just as they should. Directors tell me I have 'photographically perfect' eyes."

Use Adhesive Tape

You know the least wrinkle or bulge will show underneath a sheer costume, and for this reason many of the clever girls of Hollywood have taboored hose supporters.

How do they keep them up? Well, according to Ellen Drew, with adhesive tape.

They say Marlene Dietrich, Joan Crawford, Carol Landis, Danielle Oulbert and many others smooth tape their stockings to the skin in three places and wear them that way both on and off the screen.

Ellen said there was no trouble in getting them off either. They just keep a bottle of alcohol handy and when the adhesive is removed, a little sponge saturated with alcohol rubbed to the skin will obliterate any marks.

Perfect Silhouette

This, they say, is Hollywood's latest contribution to the perfect silhouette.

Most of the Eastern beauties, however, seem to have gone a step further. When the lace fronts of the high girdle are out of line with the scanty backless evening gowns, they just wear a short, sheer, form-fitting girdle and use bands of the adhesive across the bust to support the breasts.

This is almost the rule for the strapless kind, and quite satisfactory too.

'Sprain' May Really Be Infection

Muscle Inflammation Often Is Result of Severe Body Strain

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

A MEDICAL FRIEND of mine who was playing golf with me said at the end of the game, "I have sprained my sacro-iliac joint." The next morning I woke up with a pain in my back, evidently also a sprained sacro-iliac. When I told my friend that I had the same thing he had, he said, "Yes, and let me tell you something. That is not a sprained sacro-iliac joint. I just said that to conform to present opinion. That is an infection. You mark my words—half the men in the locker house of that golf club will have a backache over the sacro-iliac region within the next two weeks."

And lo and behold! It was just as he said. There was an epidemic of sacro-iliac strains. So it does look as if this condition is partly a sprain or wrench on which an inflammation of the muscle is superimposed. The condition goes away in a week or two, and the only treatment necessary is rest and heat applications.

Same Sort of Thing

"Tennis elbow" and "golf elbow" are much the same sort of thing. Tennis elbow was described by a Boston physician who had one. He found one morning, after he had played several sets the afternoon before, that he had a pain on the outer side of his elbow. It hurt him to make such motions as holding a glass of wat". He could not play tennis because he could not hold the racquet tightly enough.

He thought at first that it was a torn tendon or torn muscle or a little chip broken off the bone, but the X-ray d.d not show this. Finally, he decided to have a surgical operation on it. This was done under local anesthesia, so the doctor himself could look in and see what was the matter. What they found was an infected burns or sac under the muscle. When this was removed, recovery was prompt.

It is probable that many of these things we think are injuries are really infections. Tennis and golf elbows get well by themselves without so heroic a treatment as a surgical operation, but they should be rested and treated with respect. If attempts is made to use them permanent crippling may result.

Answer: No special diet. One kidney functions actively enough to take care of an adult body.

If Sugar Can Feel "Sour" Can Lemon Feel "Sweet"?

(Goodnight Stories

By MAX TRELL

"I HEARD a very sad story today," Mr. Punch was saying to Knarf and Hanid, the shadow children, the other evening.

"A sad story, Mr. Punch?" Hanid said.

"About what?" asked Knarf.

"About a lump of sugar. He lived at the bottom of the sugar bowl and he was very large. He had a name, too."

"What was his name?"

"His full name was Lump of Sweetness, but his friends at the top of the bowl generally called him Lump, for short. Now, in spite of his name, he was anything but a lump of sweetness. In fact, he was quite sour."

"You mean he was a sour lump of sugar?" Hanid said.

"Well, not exactly. He didn't taste sour. But he felt sour. You see, he was very envious of the lumps of sugar at the top of the bowl. He thought they were having a great deal more fun than he was having. He'd always keep saying to the other lumps of sugar around him: 'How those lumps of sugar at the top, they're a fine lot. No sooner is the lid lifted off the bowl at breakfast or lunch or tea or dinner than out they go. It isn't fair that they should go out and see the world while I the largest lump of sugar of all, should have to remain my whole life long at the bottom of the beap."

They called him Lump, for short.

"One fine day he made up his mind that he wasn't going to remain at the bottom of the heap any longer. Just then the sugar bowl was set out on the dinner table, and a moment later down came the sugar tongs, looking for a lump of sugar to take out. And Mr. Lump of Sweetness shouted: 'Here I am, Tongs! Take me, for I am the largest lump of sugar of all! Take me out into the world!'

"And did the tongs take him?" the shadows asked.

"Oh yes. It did, indeed. It seized him tightly about the middle and pulled him up, right past all the other lumps of sugar. This is wonderful!' he cried. 'I'll never go back to that crowded sugar bowl again!' Mr. Punch paused for a moment to sigh. "And he didn't. He fell right into a cup of hot tea and melted."

TODAY'S GARDEN-GRAPH

Written by DEAN HALLIDAY
For Central Press Canadian

Don't waste time and energy daily cutting and arranging new bouquets around the house. Cut flowers will last a long time in simple gadgets as are given them.

As shown in the Garden-Graph the only the stems should be in the water, not the foliage. Decayed foliage promotes bacterial growth. These bacteria are detrimental because they destroy the water carrying cells of the stem.

Flowers which will easily should be cut only in the morning or evening. The early morning hours are particularly favorable, since the tissues hold more fluid at that time.

Use small quantities of copperas or arsenate of lead in the soil, and follow with light cultivation as a preventative of the common cutworm. Or, lamp soil a continuous much may be used for the same purpose.

Thick clumps of daffodils, squills, grape hyacinths or snowdrops may be dug up at this season and replanted. Tulip bulbs may also be dug now and stored in a cool place until October, thus insuring that only sound bulbs are in the ground next fall.

Refrigerator Dishes Are Tempting

(The Home Kitchen)

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

YOUR GAS or electric range is ready to cook for you, and your automatic refrigerator is waiting to perform the same service, so make your refrigerator cook some tempting moulded salads and delectable desserts — just the thing for warm weather consumption. The recipes given here today are dedicated to the automatic refrigerator and those wise women who get the utmost out of household appliances.

Tuna and potato loaf is an ideal warm weather dish, easy to prepare, pleasant to consume. Its ingredients include one-half cup whipping cream, one cup boiling water, one diced medium green pepper, one cup mayonnaise, three tablespoons lemon juice, one teaspoon salt, two tablespoons granulated gelatin, one-half cup cold water, one one-pound can tuna fish, one-half cup chopped celery, two cups diced, cooked potatoes, one tablespoon minced onion, one pared, sliced cucumber. Chill cream and whip. Sprinkle the gelatin on the cold water, add boiling water and stir until dissolved. Cool. Combine the remaining items, except the cucumber, and add to gelatin mixture. Fold in the whipped cream. Pour into mold and chill until firm. Turn out on platter, garnish with cucumber slices and watercress or lettuce.

Pickle-Carrot Salad

Pickle and carrot salad is another nice warm weather concoction. It takes three quarters cup finely-chopped sweet pickle, one cup shredded carrots, one cup finely-diced celery and one package lemon-flavored gelatin. Dissolve gelatin. Place pickle in mold, add one-quarter of gelatin and let set. Add carrots and one-half remaining gelatin and let set. Repeat process, using celery, and let set until firm. Serve with combined cooked and mayonnaise dressing. These dishes look as lovely as they taste.

Frozen lemon custard, grand for the convalescent as well as for the healthy, is one of the myriad frozen confections to be made in an automatic refrigerator. One pint milk, one-half cup sugar, two tablespoons flour, four tablespoons lemon juice, one teaspoon lemon rind, three egg yolks, one-half teaspoon salt, three egg whites and three tablespoons sugar complete the ingredients. Scald milk, Cook, stirring constantly, until thick. Add lemon juice and rind. Chill. Beat egg whites, add the three tablespoons sugar. Beat until creamy, then fold into the chilled mixture. Freeze in tray.

Orfuns Cinch First Place In Intermediate League by Defeating Kingston Locos 5-4

Team Put on Alphonse And Gaston Act Before Decision Reached

EMPSON HITS WELL

Clipp Offerings of Jamieson For Four Singles in Four Tries

It isn't often you see anything like that in a baseball game. But yesterday afternoon in front of a crowd you could count on your hand and still have a couple of digits to spare, Kingston "Locos" and Alex Weir's "Orfuns" indulged in a mock-up of the old Alphonse and Gaston act before the local buckaroos walked off the field with the game, putting undisputed possession of the league leadership in their grasp. The score was 5-4.

The brotherly-love act, and subsequent win clinches first place in the Bay of Quinte League for the Orfuns, who now sit back, relax and read the funnies while Napanee, Picton and Kingston go into an orgy of out-throwing to see who will battle Belleville for the title.

Twas in the fourth inning that Ben Empson and the score tied one all that Chubb Barrage applied Joyce's short total of pickle through his fingers. The next three batters singled and a fast one got by Catcher Not to be outdone, Udall, Kingston shortstop, thinking of the befuddled pitcher in practically handing his team the pastime, sent a single to center and let Joseph St. Louis' pop bound over his head in the seventh inning, making the score one of which was the winner to go up on the scoreboard. And as the pastime was over as far as the Limestone laddies were concerned.

Shoddy Support

Shoddy St. Louis bested the veteran Jamieson in every department, the speedy one letting the Kingston staggers down with only six hits, four of which came in the fourth. He struck out four and walked one, Yamuile was not a factor. The Weir bludgeons got to him for eleven touches, two of them combined with Mr. Empson, them double and triple respectively. Belleville outfielder, accounting for four of them personally, was also a bulwark had a fled day with the shillelagh, smashing the pill for three singles on every trip to the plate. Russ Collins accounted for a brace, one of them a two-baser, while Chuck Barrage kicked in with a fine of single. Three of Kingston scored one in the third, were handed the same in the fifth and then we all. They threatened on a couple of occasions, but Jamieson was there back scratcher.

Tied Pastime

Alex Weir's beauties tied up the pastime in the third after Collins had doubled, drew within striking distance with a pair in the fourth and put the game in the bag when they gratefully accepted Udall's offer of two runs in the seventh.

The "All" massacre himself dropped a fly ball, but the danger was averted when his infield snapped off the play with a fast twin-killing.

Shortstop Jimmy Arnie! led the Kingston batters with a smashing triple and single.

Referee Corrigan was rendered homeless for fifteen minutes yesterday when a ball struck him in the mask inflicting a nasty cut on his forehead.

New York, Aug. 16.—(AP)—If anybody ever hit that jackpot Wes Ferrell did. Some gunsplitter is gossiping that the baseball baron are getting pretty well fed up on Jake Powell and will ease him out of the majors after this year. . . . Coach George Hudson, (who granted all the rumpus) learned yesterday that his Frankie Kovacs was dropped from Davis Cup squad three weeks ago. . . . Still like Kingston over Amherst tomorrow night—and more than a week ago.

Walter Kozak, a top flight golfer, was doing all right with the ponies at Saratoga until a couple of guys named Joe lured him out to a golf course and took all his dough . . . a dozen big league ivory hunters are lobking over the talent in the semi-pro tournament at Wichita . . . Believe it or not, but them Dodgers have been outplaying our lists for the last month and a half . . . Up to yesterday the figgers read Dodgers .536; Giants .519 . . . Yep, that's Cunnel Terry you hear moaning.

Joe Louis won't pick a winner but he has a wad of dough riding on that other colored boy tomorrow night . . . Cincinnati golfers are telling Smith Perebee and H. G. Willingham, the two stop golfers, to get back in their holes . . . Out there they have a "yellow streak" Anderson which is credited with playing 201 holes in one day some time back . . . .

Pedro Montanez, who folded as a lightweight against Lou Ambers, debots into the welterweight ranks against Ray Napolitano here tonight.

"NOTHIN' BALL" HURLERS ARE O.K.

All Veterans in International League Win Their Games

(By The Associated Press)

The "Nothin' Ball" pitchers, those old guys who can't mow 'em down with sheer speed any more but have to depend upon wisdom and control to take care of rival batters, are showing up something on the ball in the International League.

This season's classic example is 36-year-old Bill Rauch, who did so well with the Buffalo Bisons that Boston finally summoned him back to the majors.

The Buffalo fans celebrated "Bill Harris Night", brought Bill back for a visit and handed him a home-run ball last night. There were some 8,500 on hand and they saw another old timer, Ken Ash, do as well as Harris to pace the Bisons to a double-header victory over the Baltimore Orioles. Ash allowed only three hits, all singles, in the first game, which Buffalo won, 9-0. The Bisons got seven hits in the second game but won that one, too, 6-3 with the aid of a brilliant defence.

Another Shutout

Another veteran, Montreal's Harry Kelley, chalked up his 14th victory as the Royals whipped Syracuse Chiefs, 5-3. He gave nine hits but whiffed six and was tight when needed.

Joe Sullivan, also an ex-major leaguer, blanked Jersey Citys for Toronto Leafs in the opener against Newark's League leaders and won 7-0. Newark, as victory, spoiled accounts in the second game, winning 6-5 but only after a struggle Jersey Giants outlasted Rochester, 7-6, in a 14-inning struggle to win 3-2.

Playground Notes

West Belleville drew first blood in the city playground ball play-offs with a 4 to 2 victory over their East Belleville neighbors Tuesday. West Hill kids pushed three runs across the plate in the initial frame and coasted in with the decision. Ray Rawson helping replaced by Strand in the fifth inning and pound in second.

Rawson hurled steady ball for the losers, but was given shaky support, before the hard clouting of the Westerners. The series is the best in three with the second game scheduled for Thursday at the West Belleville grounds on Wednesday evening. Diamond and Don Locke scored for the East Hill while Strand, Semark, Watkin and Ken Rawson counted for the winners.

The lineups:

West Belleville: Strand rf. and p; Semark lb; Woodley lf; Watkin 3b; Don Woodley c; Rawson p; Murray cf; Brodie ss; Meagher 2b.

East Belleville: Don Locke as; Doug Locke 3b; McNally lb; Rawson p; Galbraith lf; Lockyer 2b; Diamond rf.

'CEMENTMEN' WIN SECOND GAME IN PLAYOFF SERIES

Point Anne Needs But One More Victory to Be Champs

ERRORS HURT

Corbys Booted Ball in Pinches; Schrieder Hits Homer

Point Anne "cementmen" took a firm grip and securely fortified their hold on the City softball League finals by making it two consecutive games without a loss in a best in five series, when they defeated the Corbys A.C. nine 8 to 3 at Point Anne last evening.

Garming four big runs in a fifth inning aplenty, the "cementmen" coasted to victory on the six hit pitching of Johnnie Bawden, who likewise had the honors in the defeating humble pie with a beautiful change of pace. That was bewildering. Bawden was never in hot water, except in the sixth when Corbys batted around to score two runs. Corbys only touched Bawden for one extra base clout, a circuit blow by Eddie Schrieder in the fifth.

Booted the Ball

Corbys booted the ball around for five costly errors behind the seven hit hurling of Eddie Schrieder and therein lies much of the success although the "cementmen" came through with several timely hits in the clutches. Sero had a double and single and Whitehead a triple in three trips to the plate. Bawden helped his own cause with a double in the fifth inning. Bawden got two hits, singles, was the only Corby batter to connect with Bawden's slants with any degree of consistency.

Schrieder's homer in the fifth and hits by Miller and Gaulin, in the sixth, accounted for the re-shuffling Corby hits, although a brace of walks were squeezed into the sixth to help in the Corby scoring. After bagging one each in the third and fourth, Whitehead, Bawden and Gaulin hit in succession and scored, Murray scoring the fourth run on a passed ball. Other Point Anne runs came from the direct result of Corby errors.

Tuesday's game at Point Anne look the second and third tussles in succession, and can win the city league softball honors with a game third and deciding victory at Coleman Flats this evening.

GABBY HARTNETT CRACKS THUMB; OUT THREE WEEKS

Cubs Also Lost Game And Now Tied For Third With Reds

PIRATES BEATEN

Pittsburgh's Lead Now Cut to Four Full Games

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr., Associated Press Sports Writer)

There's still a possibility of one of those traditionally close National League races this baseball season but right now it begins to look like a shoo-in for Pittsburgh Pirates unless they run into the kind of luck that has been plaguing their rivals.

There's no doubt the Buccaneers are a tired crew right now. They played that way against Cincinnati Reds yesterday and got a 5-2 beating as a result. But they're still managing to go along with the same team that rushed from fourth place to the top in June and early July.

Chicago Cubs, also victims of numerous crackups, took another severe blow yesterday when Manager Gabby Hartnett cracked a thumb trying to handle a foul tip off Dutch Meyerkort's bat. He won't be able to catch for three weeks, although he may be available either as a first baseman or pinch hitting duty. To make it tougher, the Cubs lost the game to the Cards and dropped into a third-place tie with Cincinnati.

The only other game yesterday saw Boston Bees trim the Phillies 5-2 as Rabbit Warstler set the pace with a triple and two singles. That moved them a full game ahead over Brooklyn Dodgers, who, like the Giants, were idle. The eight American League clubs also had the day off.

During the first inning Cooper led. Millbridge led out in 2nd. 3rd and at end of third it looked as if Millbridge might have an easy victory.

PUBLIC TAKING REAL INTEREST IN COMING BOUT

New York, Aug. 16 (AP)— The public pulse will quicken tonight as Henry Armstrong and Lou Ambers will punch it out for Lou's lightweight title in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night, and the box office is feeling the effects in the office business.

All of yesterday fans stood in line outside the box office at the Hippodrome, where the 20th Century Sporting Club makes its headquarters. Mike Jacobs beamed, and snapped his famous crockery teeth and predicted "a sellout sure."

A week ago when the bout was set for the Polo Grounds, it looked as Mike's biggest failure. But now the fans have come to him. Fans have suddenly become interested in weighing Ambers, a solid, crafty fellow, defend his title against the St. Louis terror, hailed as the greatest little fighter of a decade.

The fight over Henry by 45 rounds or 3 to 1 or better, and add the lightweight crown to his featherweight and welterweight honors.

FITZSIMMONS STILL HAS PLENTY ON THE BALL

Brooklyn, N.Y., Aug. 16 (CP)—Freddie "Red" Fitzsimmons, they call him "Fat Freddie", most of the time now—has been a part of the Major League baseball landscape for a long time but you can take it from Leo Durocher, Dodger manager, that Fitzsimmons still has plenty of substance on the ball.

Fitzsimmons came up to the Giants in 1925. That was when he was known as "Fat Freddie"

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Chris looked at no offices that morning. Luckily he had calls to make, for business was better than he had expected. His old patients greeted him happily, and there were even one or two new ones. Clearly there was prestige about Europe. When he went in for lunch he found Katie busy with a second-hand dealer. She finished her bargaining with him and came in triumphantly to lunch.

"He's a robber," she said. "But we have two weeks to get ready for him."

"I hope you remembered that the offices are mine!"

"Don't be idiotic. But I wish you'd do them over, too. They're terrible. Chris, could we have our bedroom for a while? I miss our mother's room? We ought to have a living room somewhere."

Yes, she ought to have a place to see people. Just what people? he wondered. He remembered their telephone conversations of hers, the girl who had been with her at the dance hall. But he agreed, and she went around the table and kissed him affectionately with a kiss the potatoes stared at them. Three American men, so easily cajoled! Just like the Germans! There a man was a man and a woman another, but all were ready to his children.

But Chris was stubborn, too, in his own way. He might yield to Katie, but he would not let her defeat him and that afternoon he saw Grant and borrowed two thousand dollars from him.

"I've no collateral, no security," he said. "But if I live, I'll pay it back. That's all I can say."

He did not tell Katie, busy now buying her new furniture, wearing her Vienna clothes, moving with an air from shop to shop. He took his downstairs office furnished them, and one day installed himself there. Only when they were ready did he tell her to look at them, and although she accepted and even admired them, she knew from that time on he would live a part of his life to himself. For once she was beaten.

She took it better than he expected, and when he had to admit that she had done wonders with the house on very little money.

Life was not too easy for her just then, however. With her furnishing, with Olga, with Chris's uncertain hours, with the problems of a doctor's house. The doorbell and telephone rang interminably, Sime would be in the attic for some purpose, or down into the cluttered cellar, and he called for this or that. A Vienna English was worthless for message, and by noon Katie's head was throbbing, and she would be too tired to dress for dinner. She would rest a little, fly brush back her hair, and go to the table, only too often to have Chris declare that the effort spent on the meal was spoiled.

Nothing mattered but his work, she told herself angrily. He did not need her. Even his occasional caresses, and he was not very demonstrative, aroused, and it was during that period of readjustment, too, that she staged one of her alarms about being pregnant and was hysterical for days.

She was conciliatory afterward. Chris Grant's position, he told himself for it, but there were times when he felt that she had blocked every road to the future, with the hope of a child and he was deeply and humiliatingly relieved. It was early summer by that time. One day the papers carried an item saying that Grant and Ameses had taken a cottage at the Harbor, and Chris felt that the city was suddenly empty.

He would sit across from Katie at the table while the conversation she used candles now—reflected in the silver and try to find words to be kind and gentle.

"What sort of day, my dear?"

"Nothing. Absolutely the worst day."

She was striking up friendships here and there.

He could not keep it up for long, however. They all would stay on, and he would be wanted in the office or at the hospital. Katie, he knew, would sit there in lonely grandeur, under her candles, with the heavily-hatted Olga to bring her food and the surreptitious cigarette.

There was nothing to tell her, as she sat there, that in Bar Harbor, in a white house facing the great bay Grant was sleeping on a wicker sofa in candlelight, while Jerry tired in his surreptitious way at Katie's cigarette. There were evenings when Jerry and she dined very young and very popular, among their kind; Beverly in her lovely gowns, Jerry in his faultless evening clothes.

"You're gorgeous tonight, my dear."

"Am I? That's nice, Jerry."

Eating and drinking and dancing, while the old mountains looked down on them and the stars settled across the bay. Yachts in the harbor, a British battleship coming in with its usual ceremony of parties, urbane and apparently not thinking about it at all. And the war. And then going home again to the white house, where Sandy barked a welcome and Jerry would see her safely inside the door.

"Aren't you coming in?"

"There's a moon. I think I'll take a ride. Any objections?"

"Certainly not, if you want to go."

She never knew where he went on those rides of his. But sometimes he came home in the small hours to find her still out on the upper balcony, gazing out over the water to the islands, tree-covered shadows dropped as by some casual hand.

x x x

Chris did well that autumn. His general practice was growing, and already several men had sent operations to him for the use of their offices. For the first time he had private surgical cases in the hospital—patients in private rooms with private nurses. The hospital was beginning to look to him and now he was repaying it. No patient, private or otherwise, ever paid his full cost, but at least he was helping to lower the deficit. And after a talk with Grant one day he charged more adequate fees than he had at first, and his income began to climb.

Grant went to Europe the first of the year, coincident with Chris's period of service at the hospital, and Chris took over his work. Grant had not been well. He had taken to falling asleep at all sorts of odd times; even in the office with a patient there. He was a bad color, too, and he could not be on duty by next to Dickinson in the laboratory, and some time after Chris found him in the laboratory report in his hand and his face a sickly yellow.

"Cancer at this," he said. "Nothing much to do but I'd better make a gesture.

So he went. For Chris the double job, with his own work, proved to be a day and night affair. Katie was peevish, but Chris was happier than he had ever been. When he went home, usually late at night, it was to be called frequently for a night operation.

"Good heavens! Aren't we ever going to have a night's sleep?" Katie would say drowsily.

He would not answer for fear of rousing her. He would carry his clothes into the bathroom and dress there, go into the alleyway in an old stable, he housed the small car Grant had left him. Then he and the car would be off for the night—aware that he was vital to some life, and conscious still of a small thrill of excitement.

He took off Scott's hand that winter. The hospital had been cared for his own, and so Scott was to remain; but he had an assistant now.

"I can do without the hand," he told Chris quietly. "It hasn't been much use lately anyhow. But I'm not through with the profession of medicine, Chris."

He was up and about soon, however, feeding his fish, showing the new stereoscopic plates. "Three dimensions instead of two," he would say. "We'll be showing you fellows the sort tissues soon. Then where's your diagnosis? You'll come to us and we'll tell you what's the matter."

Long years later Chris was to remember that conversation of Scott's and to profit by it.

Katie was making friends at last, Chris thought, as the year went on. Rather to Chris's surprise people called, especially the people in the neighborhood. Some of them were merely curious, but Chris liked the Katie who received them. He would see Olga carrying a tea tray up to the living room, and guessed that one or more women around a card table, teaching Katie bridge.

It relieved him, took some of the onus from his own shoulders. But one day he found Doctor Barrett there drinking a highball and Katie was aware of a constraint between them.

"I don't keep it for you," said Chris smiling with faint irony.

"Aren't you having any?" said Barrett, looking at him.

"Thanks. I don't drink in working hours."

"Thank heaven I'm not a surgeon," said Barrett, and helped himself to another of Chris's cigarettes.

x x x

Grant was away all spring, and by summer Chris was a third surgeon of himself. Barrett, who had become deeply attached to Katie, said:

"You're not superhuman," he said. "And you've been doing three men's work. What's the matter? Have you got but your nerves anyhow? You're not a factory. How long is it since you've had a real night's sleep? Look at your hands."

Chris looked at them on which they were not steady. "Funny!" he said. "Seem steady too enough."

"Better get away."

"Get away, with bills all over the place and two men to run?"

That was the nearest he had ever come to discussing Katie and that mention of her bills. For Katie was spending money now, unbridled by her position, talking about buying a car, patronizing shops that sent sparking boys to each day on her dressing. Two maids in the house, one wearing a uniform and cap and opening the door unwillingly to city cases. Candles on the table for dinner, big and still bigger bills at the daily market. And collections poor. Chris sending out his bills like shooting arrows into the air, and times when Katie would ask him, in front of town near the river, a few near relations, a deputy sheriff brought into the hospital badly beaten.

Then one hot day in the operating room, finishing up after a appendectomy, Chris felt himself go dizzy, as though all the blood had left his head. He fla'shed and went out, to find his legs soft under him and the floor apparently receding.

A week later he and Lawrence were off for a rest and the tight band around his head had already loosened. Cramped in his berth at night, he slept like a baby on the steamer. They stopped in Toronto to buy tackle and then started north. They dropped at last, black by the steamer, Chris stood on the bank and breathed deep of the crisp air.

"Fed," he said. "That's the first good meal I've had for about four years."

Chris and Ted were away when war broke out in Europe. Chris, rowing out to meet the weekly boat with their supplies, brought the news back, and Ted upset the potatoes he was peeling for dinner.

"How'd like to go!"

Chris put down the paper and got ready to clean some fish. By imagine it won't last long, he said. "Damn fish anyhow. I'm growing scales."

They dismissed it at that. They were camping alone in a wooden shack far from civilization. They lived mostly in bathing suits and in canoes, and both men were brown and strong. Chris's big muscles bulged from perspective and his hands were steady again. At night they built a smudge by the riverbank and sat there, talking or silent.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

That night when the war news came, Chris did not go to bed. He sat along for a long time on the riverbank while the fire burned low and then went out. The trees in front and the pine woods behind seemed to cut him off from life.

Death. War meant death. He stirred uneasily, seeing those men he had know and like in Vienna in the wards, Hofrat Schwartz, Hofrata, the eager young Docents, the sentry at the gate of the hospital, the old men of the Landwehr, military moustache. All equal now in death.

He was roused by the sound of a paddle, to see the leaden sheet of the river breaking into little waves at his feet. A canoe came out of the darkness, an Indian driving it rapidly and beaching it almost at his feet. He had brought a telegram, and Chris read it by the flare of a lighted match.

It said: "Father dying and in critical condition. Can you come?" and was signed "Beverly."

He went into that night with the Indian guide, leaving Ted to break camp and follow in the morning. He sat cramped in the canoe, watching the dark shapes of the pine woods as they moved past with horrible slowness. He offered to paddle, but the Indian grunted refused, and at last he settled back, smoking, in the bottom until by which he had hated and fought Staunton Lewis and now was dying, and Beverly was by him.

It was daylight when they reached the settlement, and Chris sent off his wire to Beverly. He was weary and unshaven, but by taking a boat at once he could catch the limited, and so he went on board. He was in uniform, for war, the railroad bridges under guard, the faces of the people tense and anxious. The train seemed to crawl. When it stopped Chris leaned out of the door as if he felt as if he must get out, and push it, hurry it along; not because he thought that Lewis was dying, but because Beverly had sent him word, and he was by him.

Two days later Chris operated. Grant was ill, and Beverly had insisted that Chris do it. Staunton Lewis had been shot in the abdomen, and Chris, as he stood in the man's very soul. The New York surgeon Jerry had sent for was delayed by the congestion. Chris operated.

"What's the use? He won't stand up under it," he said.

Chris put the situation up to Beverly, white and quiet, with deep circles under her eyes, but no thinner than when he had known her last, but her gaze was as direct as ever.

"You understand," he said. "He may not live. He may die. In any case—"

"It's his only chance, isn't it?" "I think so. Yes."

"Then do it, Chris."

But Lewis died more stanima than any one had suspected. He lived mostly in bathing suits and week Chris hardly left him day or night. The fight raged. Sometimes Lewis would rally, gain a little advantage, and death seemed to retreat. Then he would gain and by the next round. Then it would come closer again, lean over the bed, seem to touch it. Chris would ow over man and bed and room. Chris could almost see it there, and he would try with all his will power to thrust it back.

Part of the time Lewis was conscious. Then Chris would occasionally find his eyes upon him, ironic and slightly mocking, as if he knew what they did. "Why do it? You don't like me, and I don't like you. I'm not afraid to die."

Sometimes he would find Jerry Ames in the room, tall and smiling, and his father-in-law fixing on him a look of concentrated venom. Indeed, one of the first indications of recovery was when Lewis ordered Jerry out of the room. Not directly. He spoke to the nurse.

"Get that damn Yankee out of the room and keep him out," he said distinctly. And send in the orderly."

It was the first last action he ever given of his dislike for Jerry and his distrust of h'm. He was smiling faintly when Jerry went out, and still smiling when he turned his head and, looked at Chris.

"Go on home, man," he said weakly. "Good lord, I haven't adopted you."

"I'm going when I'm good and ready," said Chris. "Do you think I'm going to throw away a good week's work?"

"I suppose that's what I am—a good job, eh?"

"That's all. But a damned good job, if I do say it," said Chris, grinning.

They understood each other after that. It was talk Lewis could comprehend. Then one night, abruptly, he stared up at Chris with unwinking directness.

"What are you going to charge for all this?"

"All the tariff will stand! I need it," said Chris cheerfully.

On the first day Lewis was able to sit up in bed, Chris showed him a check for ten thousand dollars. Chris folded it up and put it in his pocket.

"Well?"

Chris grinned down at him. "If you think you're worth as much as that to the world, I'm not arguing. I figured on a thousand."

"You're an impudent young scamp," said Lewis, but he spoke to the nurse, coming in, found him grinning to himself.

Mrs. Wilkinson's Way Out

By CORONA REMINGTON

Mrs. Wilkinson was a cheerful soul in spite of her affliction, and was by no means disheartened when the agent for the little house she rented told her that she would have to get rent or pay in advance, now that her husband was dead.

"Sure, now, Mr. Simpkins," she smiled as she took her crutches from under her arms and dropped into a chair. "It would be just as easy for me to pay in advance as it would for me to pay in six months, fur's that's concerned, 'cause I can't do either. I haven't got a thing in this world except some bills for poor Jim's last sick spell, an' his lodge is going to pay them, Lord bless 'em."

"Well, you know, Mrs. Wilkinson, it isn't my house, or I'd say stay where you are, but an agent has to carry out the wishes of his clients."

"Oh, I'm not blamin' you at all. Fact is, I'm not blamin' anybody. That's all right. I'll look around and try to think up somethin' I can do. If you could give me a week—"

"Why, dear Mrs. Wilkinson, what could you do, crippled as you are?" He was plainly shocked.

"That's what I got to think out," he said calmly, "an' I reckon I'm not on charity yet."

The agent ignored her words and raising his hat, walked out the front door of the shabby little four-room house.

"Lord, that vine out there's like a child to me. Won't nobody love it the way I do, an' my canna bed an' all the work I done inside this house. Me an' Jim put that wallpaper on—every bit of it." Her eyes swept the familiar walls at a glance. She felt a warm tear rolling down her cheek.

"Myra Wilkinson, you're gittin' plumb sorry for yourself," she said it with vehemence of one addressing another person, a habit she had formed through nearly 40 years of days spent alone. "Now, the Lord means you to have a home, an' this is the home He meant you to have, so get to work and find a way o' keepin' it."

Children plying in the street stopped not called a friendly greeting to her. Strangers passed and looking up and seeing her sitting there apparently so calm, smiled unconsciously. She was such a pleasant sort of person.

A young couple, evidently from the country, strolled by looking long at the waving wisteria blooms and then at Mrs. Wilkinson, and the neat little house. She watched them out of sight and wondered who they were, about five minutes later they came down the street again and this time they stopped, and coming up her steps asked politely for a drink of water. Mrs. Wilkinson liked them at once.

"You'll have to step in the kitchen and get it yourself, honey. I'm a cripple an' it's such a bother to move. Glasses in the kitchen cabinet, up in the right hand corner. Ain't been in there long, have you?" she asked when they came out again.

"No," said the girl; "we—we're—we slipped off an' got married last Tuesday, an' Will's got a job at the foundry, an' I'm goin' to work at the ten-cent store. If we could only find a place to stay where we wouldn't have to pay too much. Boardin's so high," she ended sadly.

It was then that an idea popped full-fledged into Mrs. Wilkinson's head.

"Why couldn't you let me keep house for you an' you stay here?" she asked excitedly. "I wouldn't charge you nothin' 'cept the house rent an' what I'd eat. The rent's only $12 a month."

"I think it would be wonderful," said the girl, "but we'd have to pay you something."

"Lan' now, child, hush. We'll start thataway anyhow, an' when your husband gits a raise we can talk about somethin' else. Just step right into the bedroom to the left and lay off your things an' then we can see about gettin' supper, I expect. Will'll have to go get some steak an' letter. I got everything else an' a cherry pie already baked."

The girl joyfully threw her arms around the older woman's neck.

"Mother Wilkinson," she said softly, "I been so lonesome since I left home with nothin' but strangers everywhere, an' now I know I'm goin' to be happy."

EXPLOSION - TORN

stick of dynamite out of the garage window as he had intended. It exploded in his hands. As he lay on the floor a second explosion occurred as other sticks detonated. Prostrate, Dodge got the full force of the second explosion.

Worker Burned

His face was torn, his right hand was mangled and he was cut about the legs and body. Valliquette, standing nearby, was burned about the body. Mrs. Dodge was at the garage door and received the force of the blast upon the legs and face. Bryant was looking through a window and was injured when the wall was blown out.

The dynamite was left by workmen who eight years ago blasted tree stumps and rock from the property. Friends, who knew Danny's love of experimenting said that several times had expressed a wish to learn if the explosive still was in good condition. As he determined to find out yesterday Bryant picked what he thought was the safest spot to view the experiment. He was the most seriously injured of the watchers.

Terribly injured about the body, face and arms, Bryant apparently did not realize how badly he was hurt. He ran to a motorcar nearby with Mrs. Dodge to remove Dodge to the speedboat "Mac". Bryant collapsed in the car as Valliquette, dazed by the blast carried Dodge from the garage.

Rough For Car

Because of Manitoulin Island's tortuous, winding roads, too rough for Dodge by automobile in his condition, the launch was used to transport him. The water route up the inside channel of Georgian Bay is Little Current's 4-50-minute run with the speedboat, capable of a speed of nearly 40 knots.

Mrs. Dodge took the wheel of the Mac. Mrs. Bryant sat in the stern, the unconscious form of her husband across her legs. Dodge lay upon a rear seat with Valliquette who tried to bandage his young employer's wounds. Her arms bleeding, Mrs. Dodge battled an open sea with waves running 4 feet high. . . .

"My legs—my legs—they're pottering terribly," Dodge was said to have mumbled many times during the first 10 miles of the trip.

Could Not Fight Water

After 10 miles, Mrs. Dodge no longer could fight the rough water. She asked Valliquette to take over the wheel. It was while Mrs. Dodge and the young man's positions had been changed in the driver's seat, that Dodge went overboard.

"They turned around just in time to see young Dodge going over the stern of the boat. Mrs. Bryant in the excitement of the moment, with the unconscious form of her husband across her legs,

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

Wind "blows" when "Lowe [sic] his sails filled with a lusty wind." One would expect a sailor to write a code for the wind. It was Admiral Beaufort of the British navy, early in the 19th century, who classified the wind as to force, and his scale is used down to the present day. He graded the wind as to force from zero to twelve. Zero wind is calm; No. 1 is just enough to move smoke; and each step after represents increases of about six miles per hour and will refer to the manoeuvering of the men-of-war of that period. His No. 12 is hurricane force, which no canvas can withstand.

New Foe at Work in Manchoukuo Sabotage Blamed for Losses

Hsinking, Manchoukuo, Aug. 17 —(AP)—The Japanese army after seven years in Manchoukuo admits is beset by a host of enemies, a companion of recent incidents of supposed sabotage indicated today.

Japanese army officers admit Chinese irregular units remain active in the country in which Japan established a protectorate after wrestling it from China. They say the Russian Communist-inspired.

The unofficial compilation of mysterious disasters in industry pointed to a different type of enemy working within.

Japanese here admitted their fire insurance rates have been tripled in a year because of fires and explosions attending them.

Talaihar, near the northeast border, to Dairen on the south.

The Dairen power plant was destroyed twice by fires. Officials put damage at 500,000 yen (the Japanese yen is worth a fraction over 28 cents), but unofficial sources put it 1,500,000 yen. Saboteurs of a "certain foreign power" were blamed.

Last November all telephone and telegraph communications from Hsinking south were cut for three days, the only official explanation being that children at play dug up the cables, buried several feet underground.

Murders has been all too blatant. At least 30 and possibly 100 planes have been destroyed. Among them some of late Italian design.

In June fire destroyed the military food and clothing depot near Mukden and damage was put at 1,250,000 yen. A month later line installation narrowly missed being burned.

Four huge explosions rocked Mukden in late July. Fires and scares of the arsenal were destroyed. Damage unofficially was put at 2,500,000 yen.

CANADIANS PROUD OF UNION JACK, SHOULD CARRY IT

Mayor of Hamilton Admires People of U.S. For Displaying Flag

North America Never to See Such Scene as Empire Witnesses

Hamilton, Aug. 17—(CP)—Canadians are proud of the Union Jack but too few of them evidence this pride by carrying it, Mayor William Morrison, K.C., told North American Manxmen when he opened their convention here today.

"Our people are proud of the flag, even though they don't show it," he said.

According to the Mayor there were Nazi and Fascist colors flown, but comparatively few Union Jacks. "That's one thing I admire in the American, he is constantly waving a flag," the Mayor added.

Lieut.-Governor of Fisheries

His Worship welcomed Manx Governor Sydney Clarke, who, addressing the amicable relations between Canada and the U.S. All over the world, he said, countries of greater military strength were preying upon smaller, weaker neighboring countries. Such would never occur in North America.

Has Premonition Hitler May Risk Collapse of Entire Discontent

London, Aug. 17—(CP-Havas)—Premonitions that Chancellor Hitler may decide to "take the risk" of a Czechoslovak coup to erase mounting dicontent within Germany was voiced today by the diplomatic correspondent of the Manchester Guardian (Liberal).

Citing the "discontent and terror" which allegedly has sprung up after annexation of Austria, Wardlow-Milne, the correspondent declared even during rich prices, poor food and clothing, the writer said:

"Hitler and his associates must think of further conquests. The conquest of Czechoslovakia would if rapidly achieved, justify the existence of the new army, which is to a large extent Hitler's creation. Leading National Socialists also believe an armed victory in the heart of Europe would stimulate patriotic fervor and make Germany appear irresistible. It would also give her access to further supplies of raw materials, especially Rumanian oil and grain. "It is true that a long and arduous conflict would probably mean the end of the Nazi dictatorship, but the goal would be worth it. But it is feared that National Socialist leaders, Hitler included, may be inclined to take the risk and take it soon.

"That is the reason why the European situation is recognized both here and in Paris as being grave."

EUROPE STIRRED BY HULL SPEECH ON FORCE OR LAW

State Secretary Appeals to World to 'Turn Tide of Lawlessness

SEVEN PROPOSALS

In Narrowing World Nations Soon Inable to Make Choice, He Says

Washington, Aug. 17 (AP)—State Secretary Hull's appeal to the world to "turn the tide of lawlessness" through economic and moral reconstruction aroused enthusiasm today among British and French officials, worried over recurring war threats.

A spokesman for the French Foreign Office said in Paris of the United States cabinet member's address:—

"The speech shows that the leaders of America's foreign policy are alive to the danger in Europe."

Britain welcomed the address, broadcast internationally last night, as relating a danger sign against German ambitions in central Europe.

Dispatches from Rome, on the other hand, told of mounting Fascist disillusionment over the speech, which was not distributed to Italian papers by the semi-official news agency, Stefani.

Mr. Hull warned all governments to "be on guard against certain dangerous developments which imperil them."

Seven Proposals For Peace

He made seven proposals which he said were the only ones capable of placing the world firmly on the only road to enduring peace and security.

These embraced economic reconstruction, adherence to international law; observance of treaties and their orderly modification when necessary; abstention from use of force; no interference in the internal affairs of nations; and world peaceful settlement of differences; disarmament, and cultural collaboration.

Britain's smaller and smaller world" he said, "it will soon no longer be possible for some nations to choose and follow the way of reason. All will have to go in one direction and by one road.

Present Trend is Chaos

HOPES WANE FOR FINDING BODY OF DANIEL DODGE

Search is Continuing With Large Reward Offered

INJURED IMPROVING

Little Current, Ont., Aug. 17. (CP)—Search for the broken body of 21-year-old Daniel Dodge continued by air and water today as hope it soon would be found began to wane among the Georgian Bay fishermen dragging the lake depths with heavily weighted seine nets.

Privately chartered airplanes and Dodge's own Cha's Ark, an amphibian machine, flew low over the turbulent inside channel of the bay where the young lumber jack's motor car million dollars was drowned Monday.

The search was spurred by the presence of Tommy's step-father, Alfred G. Wilson of Detroit, who has offered a reward of $1,000 for the finding of the body.

Drag Channel

Six fishing vessels, manned by from 25 to 30 men, dragged the 30-foot-deep channel. With them were two trained men brought from Detroit by plane to direct the operations. The search extended for miles around the spot eight miles east of this Manitoulin Island port where Dodge fell or leaped from a speedboat.

Dodge was drowned as he was being brought here from his summer camp at Kagawong, 15 miles west, for medical treatment for injuries suffered in a dynamite explosion. The blast came as the young heir, known for his love of experimenting, held a stick of old explosive in his hand.

In the boat were Dodge's bride of 11 days, a former $15 a week telephone operator; Lloyd Bryant and Frank Hopkins, family caretaker, and Bryant's wife. Of the four, only Mrs. Bryant was uninjured in the explosion that blew out a wall of the camp garage.

Mrs. Dodge, suffering from serious head, arm and face injuries, has said she will be "immediately improved" last night in the Red Cross Hospital at Mindemoya, 28 miles distant in the interior of the island. The 20-year-old widow was secluded in her sickroom. Family members of her family were permitted to see her.

Bryant May Recover

Attending surgeons also were optimistic that Bryant, most seriously hurt of those who watched Dodge test the dynamite, would recover.

TWO VICTIMS OF "TORSO SLAYER" FOUND IN DUMP

Elusive Trail of Mass Murderer Followed by Detectives

BODIES DISMEMBERED

Cleveland, Aug. 17 (AP)—Disclosure of the fifth and fifth victims of Cleveland's "torso slayer" as spurred detectives today on the elusive trail of a maniacal mass murderer as cunning as he is brutal.

A rock-strewn dump fringing the site of the 1936 Great Lakes Exposition, near the city's business district, yielded yesterday the dismembered and dissected bodies of two persons—the last to join the mad killer's "torso" grim row.

Coroner S. R. Gerber said the slayer left his mark of surgical skill on the victims in charge of anatomy. The victims were unidentified. One of the two was a young women and six men who met a similar fate in the last three years.

Bodies Few Days

A search for scrap iron led Joseph Dwyer, 21, to the remnants of a woman. A curious passer-by attracted by officers attracted by officers and a throng gathered.

The first body was in four parts, the upper torso and dismembered arms and legs. The torso was found concealed under stones wrapped in butcher's paper, a dark blue suit and a torn quilt. The head also wrapped in paper, was a few feet distant. A similar package and two cardboard cartons held other segments.

Skull in Tin Can

Nearly 200 feet away were found the skull in a tin can, and paper-wrapped bones of the second victim.

The coroner placed the age of the woman at between 30 and 40 years.

Portions of the second victim, possibly a negro, were so decomposed as to make it impossible immediately to determine her age.

Dawn of New Era for British Coal Urged by Admirals, Ship Owners

London, Aug. 17.—(CP)—Supported by distinguished admirals of the Royal Navy and leading shipowners, a memorandum was handed today to the United Kingdom for the greatest displacement of imported fuel by domestic coal.

For several years, promoters of the memorandum, Great Britain's sea's existence has been menaced by ever-increasing use of foreign oil at the expense of her own indigenous fuel.

"Total displacement of coal in the Royal Navy and in about half your merchant marine has made our freedom of movement on the high seas dependent on the good-will of those countries which export oil," says a manifesto issued by

"It is suregized the energies of engineers, constructors, shipowners, the coal industry generally and the Government must be concentrated immediately to tackle the problem, primarily from the standpoint of national defence.

The coal industry [illegible] whole, the memorandum proceeds, has remained by political remedies such as quotas, restrictions and central selling schemes. What it describes as "political doctors" had affirmed these remedies would eliminate friction and promote extended use of British coal. The scheme, however, had proved to be the case. Price of Russian coal had risen to uneconomic figures and many shipowners had been compelled to draw

DEWEY CHARGES HINES PROTECTS POLICY RACKET

Says He Was Present When Schultz Mob Held Meeting

EXPLAINS WORKINGS

New York, Aug. 17.—(AP)—District Attorney Thomas Dewey testified a jury, the notorious Dutch Schultz mob advertised to the underworld that it would protect the powerful Tammany district leader. A political protector of the multi-million dollar policy racket.

Dewey charged that Hines was present with Abraham (Bo) Weinberg, a Schultz mobster, in March, 1932 at a meeting at which the Schultz gang laid plans to "take over" the policy racket, then unorganized.

The prosecutor said J. Richard (Dutch) Rose, "one of the evil mouthpieces" of the Schultz gang, "has been granted immunity and turned State's evidence in the present trial. was present at the meeting.

Hines Silent

"By the use of gunmen, beatings and murder, Schultz took over control of the business," Dewey said. "Its centre was located in Harlem, where 200 employees alone acted as collectors."

Dewey said that having organized the policy racket with political protection, the syndicate netted $2,000 a day in 1933, a total of $20,000,000 a year.

In his opening statement at Hines' trial on conspiracy charges growing out of the policy racket Dewey said that at the organization meeting of the gangsters, Hines was given the right to the "full protectiveness" of his political protector. Hines had already been in the policy racket when Dewey also charged the Schultz racket contributed to the campaign funds of former District Attorney William Copeland Dodge, whom Hines supported and aided in a bill of particulars he asked Hines be named "intimidation, coercion and murder" by the policy gang.

Made on Instructions

He said the contributions were made "on instructions from Hines, and the duty was to protect Hines' interests and thwart the efforts of the Democratic party's New York Tammany organization.

Dewey is continuing his case Dewey pictured the policy racket as "organized on a gigantic scale of dreams" and said that it was financed by poor people against 1,000-to-1 odds.

"Colossal sums are wagered annually in small amounts, largely played among the poorer of the city," he said.

INSURGENTS CAST THEIR LOT WITH ITALY, GERMANY

Decision May Mean End of Non-Intervention Scheme

GOVT. STRONGER

By TAYLOR HENRY

Associated Press Foreign Staff

Paris, Aug. 17.—(AP)— Spanish insurgents were reported today definitely to have cast their lot with Italy and Germany, perhaps thereby jeopardizing hopes of Great Britain and France to withdraw foreign volunteers from the civil war.

While insurgent General Franco's answer to the British plan for sending foreign fighters home from Spain remained a secret, insurgent informants in Paris predicted its terms may mean the end of "the non-intervention scheme designed to end foreign participation in the civil war.

The Spanish government July 30 accepted the plan which provides for a census of the volunteers and their repatriation as withdrawals from each side.

Insurgent sources here expressed belief the insurgent note, given to Sir Robert Hodgson, Britain's representative in Burgos yesterday, would raise so many technical objections to the London plan the reply might as well be an out and out "no."

The Spanish government, meanwhile, came out of a ministerial crisis apparently stronger than before, with Premier Juan Negrin firmly in control of all factors and pledged to fight the 22-months-old conflict to the end.

'Windsor Tapestry' Opens Up Controversy over Abdication

Compton Mackenzie Claims King Edward Forced Into Exile by Constitutional Usage, Press Opinion, Religious Prejudice and Political Nervousness

By EDWIN S. JOHNSON

Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 17 (CP)—In a more dramatic manner than the critical days of December, 1936, British readers are getting the facts in controversy over the abdication of Edward VIII, with publication of "Windsor Tapestry" by Compton Mackenzie.

In his 400 odd pages, King author alleges the former King in his extraordinary dilemma was forced into exile by the marshalling of constitutional usage, press opinion, religious prejudice, popular nervousness and political nervousness. He accuses Earl Baldwin, Prime Minister at the time of the crisis, of having "manoeuvred" the abdication.

"General belief" he writes, "had grown up that when Mr. Baldwin thought himself responsible for the handling of the King, the editor of The Times made himself responsible for the handling of the people.

Comments U.S. Press

"It was common talk in Fleet Street that a leading article delivering what amounted to an ultimatum to the King was already in type at Printing House Square, and it was presumed that this leading article would be published at the moment most serviceable to the Prime Minister, who had received that the King should not have his way."

Mr. Mackenzie exonerates the United States press of the charge of scandal-mongering in dealing with rumors preceding the abdication and has this to say regarding the self-imposed censorship of the British press:

"Virtue had been carved out of necessity before 1936. What paper would have ventured to distinguish between gossip and fact during that spring and summer? The British press was afraid of publishing libels. That was the predominant reason of the golden silence."

Edward's Promise as a Ruler

The author contends that Edward had given every promise of being an

EUROPE STIRRED BY HULL SPEECH ON FORCE OR LAW

State Secretary Appeals to World to 'Turn Tide of Lawlessness

SEVEN PROPOSALS

In Narrowing World Nations Soon Inable to Make Choice, He Says

Washington, Aug. 17 (AP)—State Secretary Hull's appeal to the world to "turn the tide of lawlessness" through economic and moral reconstruction aroused enthusiasm today among British and French officials, worried over recurring war threats.

A spokesman for the French Foreign Office said in Paris of the United States cabinet member's address:—

"The speech shows that the leaders of America's foreign policy are alive to the danger in Europe."

Britain welcomed the address, broadcast internationally last night, as relating a danger sign against German ambitions in central Europe.

Dispatches from Rome, on the other hand, told of mounting Fascist disillusionment over the speech, which was not distributed to Italian papers by the semi-official news agency, Stefani.

Mr. Hull warned all governments to "be on guard against certain dangerous developments which imperil them."

Seven Proposals For Peace

He made seven proposals which he said were the only ones capable of placing the world firmly on the only road to enduring peace and security.

These embraced economic reconstruction, adherence to international law; observance of treaties and their orderly modification when necessary; abstention from use of force; no interference in the internal affairs of nations; and world peaceful settlement of differences; disarmament, and cultural collaboration.

Britain's smaller and smaller world" he said, "it will soon no longer be possible for some nations to choose and follow the way of reason. All will have to go in one direction and by one road.

Present Trend is Chaos

"We well know, of course, that a condition of wholesale chaos will not develop overnight; but it is clear that the present trend is in that direction and the longer this

DRIVER OF CAR IS NOT BLAMED

Napanee, Aug. 17—A coroner's jury today held no blame against Walter A. Anderson of Hamilton, who was driving the car that struck and instantly killed 5-year-old William Robert Bowen on Highway No. 2 near Greenwich Sunday afternoon.

Evidence showed that the child was walking west on the north shoulder of the highway in company with his sister, Helen. He went out on the pavement as if to cross to the south side but hesitated at the centre line as if he would turn back, but when approaching any steps he continued on his way across.

The car swerved well to the left in an effort to miss him, but he was struck by the right fender and suffered a penetrating tear on the right side of the skull that entered into the brain tissue, causing instant death.

Barney Wright Wins Danforth Picnic Race

FINALS TODAY

Additional "Soap Box Derby" honors were won by Belleville drivers yesterday when Barney Wright, Yeomans Street, won the senior championship and Peter Tuckett, Pine Street, the junior honors in the Toronto Danforth Business Men's annual "Kid Kar Derby" for the championship of Toronto and district. Over 10,000 persons lined the Toronto course as Wright and Young swept through to score easy victories in their respective classes. Inclement weather forced the postponement of the final portion of the day's programme, however Wright, senior champion, will return to meet Young, the junior titleholder, in a special "All-Toronto" race, that is scheduled to be "run off" on day due to the postponement.

During a short, brown-bodied little car, Ernest Young, tow-headed twelve year old, far outclassed his field to win the junior class, while Barney Wright, aged thirteen, scored an equally easy triumph in the senior division.

"The two boys will meet this afternoon in the championship race at two o'clock. Rain forced postponement of the event after the senior finals had been held.

Cheer Showmanship

The showmanship of the two lads had the younger persons in the crowd cheering them in the way that they coasted low over the wheels of their flying cars in the short run down the steep, almost hill. Ernest Young was timed at close to thirty miles per hour as he sped down the hill to capture the junior title.

But while twenty-six other contestants were hopelessly outclassed by these two speedsters, the boys from Trenton never gave up trying and provided some of the keenest competition of the day to meet. None of the boy had vehicles as fast as the leaders, but some of them quite measured up to the driving ability of the winners.

Only seven boys entered in the junior division which was run-off in three heats in this class the winner of each heat was far ahead of his rivals as he crossed the finish line. And then the fun that little fab-headed boy from Belleville spent during the course to win by more than fifty yards.

Competition was much keener in the senior division, but here again the Belleville boy was much the better driver, steering his home-made cars in this class, and the events were run off in nine heats. Young had a little difficulty in steering his heels in either his heat, the final or the semi-final, but finally the gameness of the other entrants for the derby kept the event from being a complete rout.

Labor Over Cars

All day yesterday the boys labored over their cars on Logan Avenue making last-minute adjustments and then in the afternoon, having them carefully examined as to width, brakes and steering gear by picnic officials.

As an example of how keen the Park Tuckett boys were, Douglas Neary enough to hold the road in the races, he stored away his old storage battery in the back of his car. Officials removed the battery at the weigh-in, but only reprimanded the lad.

After the grand championship race is held this afternoon, all the boys who entered in the car derby will enter a brake-testing contest, the car with the best brakes being the winner.

Growing Parasite To Combat Worm

Large green worms that are ravaging the tomato fields of the district especially those in Prince Edward County, are the ordinary worms that are usually seen at this time of the year, only far greater numbers, Mr. A. B. Baird, Dominion Entomologist here stated yesterday.

Prince Edward farmers in the vicinity of Ameliasburg called for help in resisting the attacks of the invaders that in some cases have stripped entire fields of tomato foliage and in other places have attacked the fruit itself.

Representatives of the Dominion Entomological Laboratory here responded and stated adding that the scourge has been prevalent this season in the surrounding counties of this district. Other farmers reported arsenate of lead in an effort to combat the worms, but with little or no effect."

"We are trying to introduce a new parasite that next year, we hope, will eliminate this enemy of the tomato fields. The Department of Agriculture is already planning with this in view," Mr. Baird added.

CANNING FACTORY OPEN TO-MATOES

Waupoos Canning Factory officially opened the tomato-canning season in this district yesterday. With tomatoes being rapidly harvested in other parts of the district other factories will commence operations this week.

KINSMEN PRAISE DERBY HANDLING AT AKRON, OHIO

Sudden Reversal of Popular Acclaim is Seen

WILSON WELCOMED

Cream-shirted members of the Belleville Kinsmen Club tried from the effects of a long journey and the thrills and excitement of the world's championship soap-box derby, that attracted over one hundred thousand people to the famous Derby Downs at Akron, Ohio, on Sunday, arrived in the city yesterday.

Those who did not view this unique sports event can hardly imagine the high pitch of enthusiasm that marked the huge crowd as the diminutive drivers from one hundred and thirteen cities of the United States with representatives from Canada, Australia, Hawaii, Panama, Europe and Africa, sped a hundred foot course to victory or defeat.

The highlight of the entire series of races however, the Kinsmen state, was the sudden reversal of popular acclaim from Dickie Ballard, White Plains, N.Y., at first declared the winner of the American championship, to Bobby Berger who was later declared the champion after a photo of the close finish had been procured.

Nearly Mobbed

Newspapermen, photographers, newsreel cameramen and a clamoring mass of humanity mobbed Ballard as the announcement was made that he was the winner. Wildly cheering spectators literally tore the shirt from his back in their efforts to get a souvenir. They tore him from his car and isolated him absolutely, as a cordon of police attempted to rescue the youth from his ardent admirers.

Then came the announcement that Bobby Obata, was the actual American champion, and not Ballard as was at first announced.

The fickle crowd, ever willing to acclaim a new champion dropped Ballard, like the proverbial hot cake, and rushed to the side of Berger where another wild demonstration of excited enthusiasm was given.

Tears came into Ballard's eyes He sat there for a second, a lonely forlorn figure. Indeed, he was the actual process of speaking his mind and a wistful little over a radio microphone when the announcement was made that Berger had won.

Members of the Kinsmen club who motored to Akron, a distance of nearly two hundred newspaper reporters, were all for Berger and he was a popular one with the press. The newshounds rooted long and loud for Berger as he sped down the "home through" and when the finishing announcement was made to effect, the gentlemen of the press forgot their decorum and yelled and whooped like a bunch of high school students.

Made Host of Friends

Bobby Wilson, the Canadian champion, made a fine showing at the race, Kinsmen stated. The dark-eyed, handsome, twelve-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wilson, 111 Chatham Street, was extremely popular with Akron officials, newspapermen and other drivers. His modest, unassuming manner gentlemanly deportment caught on with the crowd, and many were cheering for him when the boy racer flashed down the track in competition with the cream of international drivers.

The Canadians got a grand reception from Akron officials" Wm. Hurst said. "We got a grand announcement over the loud-speaking system. The announcer told the crowd of the large representation of Canadians present who had accompanied their champion from Belleville, Ontario, he knew, and had even brought along a Kilties Band to cheer him along. "This was an error in part," Hurst smilied. "The Exact Register of Kilties was absent from Windsor, but as you know they were not there in connection with Wilson and us."

The Kinsmen spoke in glowing terms of the care taken by race officials in examining the cars previous to the elimination heats. Each car was carefully inspected with regard to measurement, wheels, etc., and a number of disqualified youths were evident when the committee discovered their racers. Discovery of diamond-point bearings in a number of the wheels brought the problem of officials that was not settled until a rush call had been sent to Detroit for an expert, who grabbed the first plane and arrived at Akron in time to make an inspection. Thirty-seven cars, found to be using the diamond point bearings were ordered to change wheels. Ballard was among these.

Sportsmanship, symbolizing the spirit of American youth featured a grand parade held on the course previous to the elimination heats.

Brilliant Parade

While one hundred thousand people cheered their approval on a perfect day, all of the one hundred degrees of heat, the youthful racers carried their flags past the review to the music of several bands. Flocks, decorated trucks, automobiles, formed a kaleidoscopic scene of moving beauty. Youth at work, and at sport, were pictured as the parade passed by. The spirit of youth was truly exemplified in the glittering parade of color that marked the parade as being one of the most attractive features of the races.

Overhead, planes of all sizes and descriptions roared a salute to the marching youths. Swooping, diving monoplanes, biplanes, in fleet planes of every description skimmed over the top of the thousands of parked cars in tribute to the youth of the nation.

The Kinsmen banquet and interest was seen in the tremendous number of entries attracted by the grand prizes and the honor and glory of being the world's champion soap-box driver. Michigan slons sent seven entries. From far off Yakima, Washington, came a smiling boy. A delegation from St. Paul, members of a syndicate who backed their favorite heavily to win, accompanied the youth to the scene of the race. Smiling parents, grandmothers, sisters, brothers and friends came in little knots to watch their favorite drivers perform.

Belleville Kinsmen were loud in their praise of the race driven by Bobby Wilson. "He is a real sport," the proverbial cucumber, they said, and seemed not a little affected by the noise, excitement and thrills that an event of this nature brings about. He refused to become excited and was thrilled to death when he drove his Canadian car across the line to eliminate the Australian entry."

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to go

The liver should pour out two pints of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food just decays in your bowels. It just decays in the bowels. Gas blocks up your stomach. You get constipation. Poisons get into the body, and you feel sour, sunk, sleepy, sick all over.

A mere bowel movement doesn't always get at the cause. You need something that really starts the liver bile flowing freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills for just that purpose. Gently but surely they get the liver bile flowing freely and set you "up and up" as thousands and thanks to Carter's Little Liver Pills. Refuse substitutes. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name! Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

READY FOR THE FAIR

Belleville Fair is but a short distance in the future. The season is beginning to tell of the steady advance of summer and of the approach within the not distant future of the autumn. The annual district local exhibition is however a late summer event, though it brings together every-thing in the nature of the time-honored exhibition of autumn. Harvest is well-advanced and by the opening of the fair the farmers now know the best that the season has been able to give them. By fair time production of the season is known.

This year has in more respects than usual been a good one for agriculture. The farmers will show the proof of this two weeks hence when the fair is in full swing because the local exhibition is a finer cross-section of rural and urban prosperity, progress and development than any other institution.

Though the fair is twelve days away, officials give every hope that the record set in 1938 will be one of which everyone maybe proud who has had anything to do with making the fair a success.

The fair, despite the fact it is one of the oldest institutions of civilization, is also the most modern; it achieves what no other association of men and women can achieve, it is the great festival that shows the progress of the farm and industry. Today the industry of the farm and the industry in town and city are the two sides which spell the condition of a district or a province or a nation.

LESS NOISE

Mayor Bone spoke about noises the other day.

Mayor Bone in this respect is pointing the way to better days and more enjoyable nights, let everyone hope.

So much of the racket at night is caused by the fact that men and women, boys and girls have not quite adjusted themselves to the mechanisms they have had thrust into their experience. It used to be that to drive a car, a youth had to drive with the cut-out open, to make himself believe he was travelling fast and perhaps he was moderately so. Now while many people do not seem to have such desire to prove their speed today, they still have some of that prehistoric desire for noise as proof of speed though they can't use cut-outs.

Take the man who starts up his car and races his engine and runs hundreds of feet before he changes gear. He makes a noise which is bad enough by day and terrible by night.

There is the tooter who rather than get out of a car and go to a door to announce himself, gives a giant's push at the electric button which releases the most excruciating sounds out of the horn from the middle of the road to tell that he is coming. He does not wait until he gets to the curb. This motorist is one of the least desirable of persons and soon sets a neighborhood in mental despair, especially if he is a neighbor.

Some invention is required to reduce the sound of cars stopping at stop-streets, then starting up with the usual mounting sound as the momentum increases, and grinding to the great gears over until this disturber of day and night rest is out of range of the sensitive modern ear. But he is no sooner out of sight when the blast of another horn is heard with another grinding of brakes, another sound of gaining momentum and another brake change disturbance. On and on it goes night and day.

Science must offer some device of lights or something else which will eliminate the need of sounding horns at all times and the wearing grinding sound as the cars come to a stop street and start up again.

Perhaps these things are too much to ask in an age which thinks of noise as part of experience. But engineers are trying to reduce these noises and some day quiet will be more the mark of traffic on the streets night and day than noise is at the present time.

Everyone ought to help every cause for noise reduction for noise disintegrates the healing powers of nature in sleep and when one is awake too.

SUMMER MARCHES ON

Summer marches on. Crops are in harvest, the grasshopper is here, birds have raised their young, and the first signs of the preparations for the flight to the south are evident as twittering birds gather in the skies. The sound of the cicada is in the land, the sound that everyone knows so well in the dogdays. In the country life is one hive of activity.

The present summer has been marked by many features, the thunderstorm not to be forgotten. This year there have been many electric storms. The weather has also been hot and there has been marked humidity, but for one thing the people are thankful, they have not had to go through the experiences of a summer snowstorm, such as covered English districts to a depth of two feet, this unusual visitor being accompanied by other disturbances of the usual round of nature, in electric storms, floods and winds which caused millions of dollars loss and claimed a number of lives.

POLAR BEAR IN TORONTO ZOO HAS A WHALE OF A TIME with a piece of rubber hose. He throws it over his head, dives for it, comes up smiling with the rubber in his mouth. Throws himself over backward from the side of the pool and generally has a whale of a time splashing round. His companion is one of the dour kind, from the time he was born, only sits and watches the other with a sneer which plainly says: Look at the darn fool wasting his energy and getting nowhere. However, from the outside looking in, it seems as if the polar bear thinks he is having a good time, while his dour companion knows that, personally, he is not having any kind of a time at all. If it is true that as a man thinketh so is he, then a polar bear may have the same indulgence.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, President of the United States, and author of "The New Deal, will be in Belleville Thursday morning, it is expected, about nine o'clock, en route to Kingston where he will receive a degree from Queens University ,also several high degrees of heat, unless the weather moderates, then proceed to the opening of the new international bridge across the St. Lawrence at Ivy Lea. Incidentally the opening ceremony will be broadcast on all networks, being carried on the Lansdowne telephone lines to Kingston and thence on the Bell Telephone wires to Toronto for radio connection.

DOES SPORT PAY? SURE! SOME PEOPLE. Pittsburg Pirates, professional football club has just signed Byron (Whizzer) White to play twelve games this fall for which he is to receive $15,000. Whizzer has a football record in Colorado as the highest football scorer, 1938 and as the most publicized football player of last years' batch of college gridiron heroes. Byron White worked his way through the University of Colorado doing odd jobs at high cost football scores. 1938 interested the offer of the Pirates of fifteen thousand dollars for twelve games—because he wanted two years at Oxford he had won as a Rhodes scholar. When he found out that he could defer entrance into Oxford long enough to earn the Fifteen Grand he accepted the offer and will be a professional Pirate for twelve games. He sure will be able to do the honours at Oxford as behooves a gentleman and a scholar and a professional football player.

IN "THE SPORT OF KINGS' Hollywood celebrities are getting a great thrill. What with Bing Crosby's horses which are trained on the "After You Alphonse" code, hundred thousand dollar purses and two-horse match races the thrills are high, wide and handsome. Last thrill was at Del Mar track in California 'when the turf meets the surf' is a term used to describe Sea Biscuit, (out of Hardtack) national champion and big money winner, and Ligaroli, a South American racer. The latter is owned, by the son of the owner of Sea Biscuit, and it is said with Mrs. Crosbie in the ownership of this six-year old-flash. Sea Biscuit won by an eyelash after a neck and neck contest all the way.

"HUMITURE" IS THE LATLEST EXPRESSION ALONG THE GREAT WHITE WAY—which being translated means the approximate degree of the weather in terms which "the man on the street" may understand. Take the ordinary thermometer reading of the weather, also the degrees of humidity, add the two together, then divide by two, and you have the "humiture." Example if the temperature is 76 and humidity 98 per cent of saturation, the humiture would be 87.

Newspaper Man Visits Races

Psychologists tell us that most behaviour in life is a form of escape (which is a good an excuse as any). With the market averages, the diplomatic cables and other news speaking gently, we decided to stop trying to get our fourth putt up close, and seek high, implausible adventure (plus forgetfulness) at the races.

Well, to make a long story short, Del Mar track is not for us, we hadn't. Our visit to the track, of course, was concerned mainly with improvement of horse-breeding, but we have to admit that, with no pecuniary motive whatever, but just for the hell of it, we staked a few shillings on the proposition that we're not a judge of horseflesh.

It wasn't that we lacked advice; that we didn't consult with experts. We had, and we did. People just crazy about horses (we could tell it by the way they studied the racing forms) placed all their bets at our disposal. They told us that such and such horse, out of such and such another horse, had a cinch, that it was an indignity for it to be on such a track instead of matching roots with War Admiral at the Pimlico Futurity. We, alas, had no Futurity.

Tips! We had them from the grizzled boy, who sells programs. We had them from owners, and from friends of owners, and from friends of friends of owners. Finally, once we had one from a man whose connection seems to be less (that's what he said) with the aunt of the jockey, we didn't prosper.

That's why they call the "daily double". This race setting-up exercise part of psychology, part science or process of improving the breed, consists of one's ability to pick the winning horse in two consecutive races. Here, bringing into play all one's skill, plus a little diversified hedging on our judgment, we were enabled to grasp the winner of the first race, but never the second. Some mistake, we think, in the records sorted to betting on numbers, and on combinations of numbers, and on "boxes" (we don't think of Dinah"!) and on the colors of the jockey's cap—to no avail. Finally, we reflected sadly that if racing be the sport of kings, as Shakespeare or somebody said it was, the genealogical tree of our royal lineage will be found somewhere crooked.

Yet there was one thing that we liked: a sort of camaraderie of horses lead from barrier to camera. On the way from nowhere out of Others come from nowhere to the race track, from garrison finish. The ones we bet on always remained well behind, where everybody could see them.—Ottawa Journal.

KIWANIANS HEAR REAL HISTORY OF SMALLER STATES

European Situation Discussed by Dr. Rev. R. Boudreau of Picton

FINE ADDRESS

A true insight into the conditions in Europe was presented Tuesday at the weekly luncheon of the Kiwanis Club, when Dr. Rev. R. Boudreau, Presbyterian minister of Picton, spoke to the members on "The Line-up Europe Has Failed to Fight." The speaker was introduced by J. Owen Herity and Kiwanian appreciation for the splendid address was given by Eddie Logan. A number of guests including Leslie Salisbury of Berkley, California; his son Harold Salisbury, of Kingston; Mark Gordon Friesen, Manager of the Belleville Hospital and Neil Macdonald, were roughly enjoyed the luncheon and each spoke a few words expressing their pleasure at being present. Albert Boynton, president of the club, presided, while Herb Hinscutcheon, was commander and the worked the people like serfs. Lilliputians, for 600 years, was a part of Poland, and came to Russia in the partition of Poland. Then for the 20 years as independent states the people have been happier than they have been for years and a Europe working for a hemogenous would foster small nationalities but the Europe of today regards these states as pawns in the game played by the two dictators of Europe. For the moment Russia is too busy with internal affairs and construction to bother but Germany and Poland covet the Baltic shores and the rich corn lands. A world occupation or by armed invasion to absorb these three small states."

Poland

"If these three were confederated with the northern block states they might stand. The main object would be for peace, but there is a difference of language and in race and with experience in self government these stand apart from other confederations. But they will be fortunate and so will Europe if events gives them sufficient time to find their own feet before some great power regards them as booty. Poland, a new nation formed by the treaty of Versailles was the largest of the group formed. In 1921 the population was 31 millions but this is increased to 35 in the era of one half million a year. Here is a people little more than half who can read and write but are keen on preserving their independence recovered. Here, as in the Baltic nationalities, when Poland stretched from the Baltic to the Black Sea. In all the years they were subject of Russia, Germany and Austria they dreamed of the day when the world of Kingdom would be created and they were not satisfied with the boundaries left by the war.

"The Polanders coveted Lithuania on the west and took Vilna and the Russian Ukraine on the south. Poland is between two great powers and in the way of playing a dangerous role for an alliance with Germany with interests in the Russian territory that she wants but she would have to reckon later with Russia. Poland would be a drastic loser to her great ally," said Dr. Boudreau. "Poland's future is growing faster than any country in Europe and the people are industrious and intelligent and capable of producing great geniuses."

Czechoslovakia

"This country," said the speaker, "is the hot bed of Europe. For 1000 years the land was a part of the Austrian Empire and was Germanized. Even so the country has never forgot its glorious past as an independent state and has always struggled to regain its freedom. When the World War came the people recognized its chance and when it ended the country had gained its ambition. The people of Czechoslovakia have to deal with national aspirations in this state and the accumulated facts and their independence was brought about, not by soldiers or statesmen, but by the philosophers, Masaryk and Benes. Sudeten Germans and Slovaks and Ruthenians on the east were added and these racial minorities have been faithful and they would be satisfied with their lot if they were not pushed about to re-volt by Germany and Hungary. The Hungarian menace is not serious but the Nazi menace is a real threat for Germany has designs on the rich grain lands control of the Danubian basin. Czechoslovakia is an island in the midst of states bent on her destruction."

Czechoslovakia has always depended on France for her protection," said the speaker. "But if the protection fails she will have to make the best peace possible with Germany and the terms will be very strict." The speaker in closing reviewed Jugo Slavia and Turkey, showing their positions and aims in this European conflict. The address was most instructive and interesting and brought to the people a new light on a difficult situation.

Shortening The Match Stick

They are going to save money in Japan by reducing the length of matches. The Japanese match is shorter than ours in any case, by nearly so stout. It is hardly possible to reduce the size further without weakening it too much. So they are going to make the stick shorter by something less than one-thirtieth of an inch. That last one-thirtieth of an inch is to be sawn away anyhow. So the Japanese are going to cut off and save the wood. They expect to save a million yen or $300,000 in the course of a year.

Westerners laugh at the idea of saving one-thirtieth of an inch on a match stick. But westerners have hardly any idea how to save anyway. Nature has been too kind to them. Even our most economical people—even those of Aberdeenian upbringing—are extravagant by Japanese standards.

Densely crowded into a group of small and mountainous islands, the Japanese have been compelled to conserve and utilize and plan in ways that to us seem hardly possible. Every twig from their forests is turned to account, every shred of wood from their sawmills. No land is wasted. Mountain sides are terraced. Rice fields scarcely larger than would seem, than a pocket handkerchief are enclosed. Even the boundary dikes are made to support crops. In fact the greatest space is conserved by the general practice of economies.

But with the Japanese economy is not parsimony and poverty is not the same as scarcity. These remarkable little people have learned to substitute resourcefulness for resources, and out of their difficulties succeeded in maintaining a life of dignity and astonishing richness.

They will succeed in saving something on their matches, because they know the technique. The point is that the reason for their latest economy is that they may go further in the wastefulness of war.—Vancouver Province.

That Body of Yours

Preventing Formation of Kidney Stones

As students we were taught about stones in the kidney or in the tube going from kidney to bladder. We were told that they were caused by a deposit of crystals in the tissues of the body. They caused severe colic pains, and morphine must be used to ease the pain and relax the tissues surrounding the stone. Stones were small the size of a pea, to the size of a hen's egg.

Today physicians are not content to simply treat kidney stone colic and remove stones. They are now studying the causes of these stones and how best to prevent their formation. Dr. Rose Kording, writing what is called "The Stone Clinic" says that for over a year she has been at Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston. Dr. Fuller Albright, in the New England Medical Journal, says the Stone Clinic represents an effort to learn more about the prevention of kidney stones by a combined study of the problem by the surgeon, general physician, the chemist, and the urinologist (that is a kidney specialist). Ischiewig Holstein) the people attended on France for their protection could not be formed. In many districts, which had formerly belonged to different states and independent states were set up, the language varied and this would prove whether Europe in future will be a success or a failure.

The speaker chose as his first subject Poland, stating that in stating it was the only country in Europe that paid its war debt in-Switzerland, the poorest and one of the smallest, paid its "debt" said Dr. Boudreau. "The country is not related to either of its most powerful neighbors, Russia and Sweden. In the past they have been overrun several times because but never have they given up their struggle for independence. In future they must avoid subscription by Russia or Germany, the latter of whom has designs upon the coast shore of the Baltic. If Finland and the Baltic States remain free they can form a powerful ....k and can be stabilizing influence in Europe's international politics. The Finns are our genus, prudent imaginative and methodical and all can read and write.

The Three Little Baltic States On the eastern shore of the Baltic the Great War created three new members, Lettonia, Estonia and Lithuania, all of which were a part of Russia. These states are small, but considerable trade has also made peace with her "me

Psychologists tell us that most behaviour in life is a form of escape (which is as good an excuse as any). With the market averages, the diplomatic cables and other news speaking gently, we decided to stop trying to get our fourth putt up close, and seek high, implausible adventure (plus forgetfulness) at the races.

Well, to make a long story short, Del Mar track is not for us, we hadn't. Our visit to the track, of course, was concerned mainly with improvement of horse-breeding, but we have to admit that, with no pecuniary motive whatever, but just for the hell of it, we staked a few shillings on the proposition that we're not a judge of horseflesh.

It wasn't that we lacked advice; that we didn't consult with experts. We had, and we did. People just crazy about horses (we could tell it by the way they studied the racing forms) placed all their bets at our disposal. They told us that such and such horse, out of such and such another horse, had a cinch, that it was an indignity for it to be on such a track instead of matching roots with War Admiral at the Pimlico Futurity. We, alas, had no Futurity.

Tips! We had them from the grizzled boy, who sells programs. We had them from owners, and from friends of owners, and from friends of friends of owners. Finally, once we had one from a man whose connection seems to be less (that's what he said) with the aunt of the jockey, we didn't prosper.

That's why they call the "daily double". This race setting-up exercise part of psychology, part science or process of improving the breed, consists of one's ability to pick the winning horse in two consecutive races. Here, bringing into play all one's skill, plus a little diversified hedging on our judgment, we were enabled to grasp the winner of the first race, but never the second. Some mistake, we think, in the records sorted to betting on numbers, and on combinations of numbers, and on "boxes" (we don't think of Dinah"!) and on the colors of the jockey's cap—to no avail. Finally, we reflected sadly that if racing be the sport of kings, as Shakespeare or somebody said it was, the genealogical tree of our royal lineage will be found somewhere crooked.

Yet there was one thing that we liked: a sort of camaraderie of horses lead from barrier to camera. On the way from nowhere out of Others come from nowhere to the race track, from garrison finish. The ones we bet on always remained well behind, where everybody could see them.—Ottawa Journal.

Letters to the Editor

IN PRAISE OF MUSIC

To the Editor.

The Ontario Intelligencer,

Dear Sir,

It was my pleasure and privilege to hear one of Belleville's outstanding singers in the person of Mrs. (Dr.) Ezig. While sitting in Church last night I thought that one of the supposed-to-be-lovers of music in our fair city and wonder if it were really true that a prophet is not without honour save in his or her own country. Mrs. Ezig's voice was a fair congregation but not large enough to do her justice as an outstanding. Her renditions of "Out of the Woods" and "Liddie's 'Abide With Me' were wonderful and perfect voice and wonderful soul interpretation. Why can't we have a night this morning, why our people refuse to turn out and support the efforts of the local organization.

Your own band has tried to bring to you music that is understandable, numbers that should please the ear of the average people, but so far our efforts have been appreciated by only a few. We as a band, want to give you the music that you would like to hear. Won't you please turn out and support the Band when it is so willing to give to you generously to pay for it later for your enjoyment? Let Belleville live up to its reputation not only in name but in word and deed.

Mrs. Ealy, kindly accept my deep appreciation for your two beautifully rendered solos at Tabernacle Church on Sunday morning.

Thank you, Editor.

Yours truly,

Prof. Jobson,

Director of Music,

Belleville Municipal Band.

WORK ON CHURCH NEAR COMPLETION

Interior Decoration of Bridge St. Church Well on Way

Using approximately over one ton of paint, decorators at work in Bridge Street United Church will flash interior decoration within the next 4 day or so, officials of the congregation announced today.

Paintwork in the interior of the large auditorium is practically finished and workmen putting finishing touches on the lobbies at the front of the church. The Sunday School auditorium is finished with painters now at work in the various Sunday School rooms.

Workmen yesterday removed the huge scaffold erected in the auditorium to allow electricians to install the main lighting fixtures that will hang from the centre of their ceiling. Other fixtures have been installed and are complete.

Practically all of the new heating system has been installed. Radiators gleaming in silver colors are ready, and all interior piping is complete. Th new boiler-house being erected at the west end of the church, is rapidly approaching completion. The boiler has been installed and piping operations connecting the interior system with the boiler room are progressing rapidly.

THRESHING DAYS ARE HERE AGAIN

Time And Invention Have Made Changes in Operations

Threshing operations, in the words of rural correspondents, "are the order of the day" in this section and throughout the district busy clacking, tractor-powered combines are threshing the golden grain which flows like amber-colored fluid into the hander bags.

But the old order has changed on more than the rural district. The days of big threshers, big gangs and big meals, have disappeared. No longer is the good farm wife compelled to impress the services of friendly neighbors to help prepare the meals for the husky threshermen who manned the former bigger steam-powered outfits which threshed the season's crop from the mows in the barns.

It's different now, as a survey of the district will show. Smaller gasoline tractors have replaced the former steam outfits. And the grain is threshed in the fields. Therefore, when the few needed to operate the smaller outfits, sometimes carry their own lunches, or are invited to simpler meals in the home of the farm they are on. No longer must preparations for the dinner be prepared days ahead by the hard working farm wife and helpers. The day of big dinners has passed.

JUST A BILL-FISH!

Jimmy Price, son of S. J. Price of McDonald avenue, is an observant boy and seeing near his boat on the way on odd looking young fish, he threw out his line and snagged the fish.

It proved to be a young bill-fish, the "bill" being about one fifth or one quarter the length of the creature.

The river at the present time is overrun with these voracious creatures.

Duplessis Helps Onta rio Premier Celebrate

Celebrating his 42nd birthday on his spacious farm near St. Thomas, Ont., Premier M. F. Hepburn of Ontario played host to a gathering including Maurice Duplessis, premier of Quebec, with whom he is shown above, as he drove him around for a look at the farm. The visit of his neighboring premier had no political significance, according to Hepburn.

PRESENTATION

On learning of the intimation the Allan family to leave Aikens community, friends and neighbors presented them with tokens of sincere friendship and appreciation for willing service rendered at Sunday School and church in the past. The presentation formed a part of the programme for the ice cream social at Aikins Church on Wednesday Augustird. Wee Barbara was presented with a signet ring; Marion and Marjorie each received a Waterman fountain pen; Mrs. Allen was presented with a purse containing a sum of money and an address which read as follows:

Dear Carrie, Marion, Marjory and Barbara,—

Your friends in this community are sincerely sorry that conditions make it necessary for you to leave our neighborhood and go to live elsewhere.

We shall very much miss your help in all our church and school events. We have grown to depend very much upon the assistance of you girls, both in singing and speaking and your places will not be easily filled. Carrie, have helped in every way you could and we have particularly appreciated your encouragement of the children, as well as your assistance in the work of the W. A. and W. M. S. whenever we asked anything of you.

We feel that this community means much to you, since you have here known a great deal of both joy and sorrow. Your neighbors have shared these with you and now that you are leaving we have decided to give you some reminder of the friends in the Aikins Church and school community so neighbors, friends and schoolmates have contributed to the gift with which we are presenting you tonight.

We sincerely hope you will find happiness and contentment in your new home. To you three girls we give every good wish for successful, happy lives. You have made a fine start, ready always to serve. You have a loving, thoughtful mother and we remember, with pride, the fine and noble character of the gentleman who was yours fat . We are sure that you will prove fine young women of the same splendid character that your parents have shown.

You, Carrie, will for many years hope, find pleasure, happiness and comfort in the development of your three lovely girls. We shall follow the future of all of you with kindly interest and prayerful thoughts.

And now, may these small gifts remind you always of true friends in this community.

Signed, Aug. 3, 1938.

HOPES WANE FOR FINDING BODY OF DANIEL DODGE

Suffering from internal injuries, Bryant was brought to hospital unconscious. Yesterday for the first time he began to display an interest in his surroundings. Valiquette, named about the body, was released from hospital.

Whalley Dodge fell from the boat he was rendered crazed by the pain of his injuries and leaped overboard remained uncertain. The widow said yesterday he fell out as he tried to get to the stern to show her how to help her control the craft in a pitching sea. Mrs. Bryant said "it seemed to me as though he dived over the side."

Danny's right hand was mangled in the blast. His face was torn and he was cut about the lower abdomen and both legs. Surgeons who attended the injured when the speedboat docked said that from the description of his injuries Dodge probably would have died in any case.

"The deciding emotional factor which prevented revolution during the decade which succeeded the peace of Versailles was the capitulation of the popularity cry to the personality of the Prince of Wales", the author says.

After a lengthy survey of the marriages of the Hanoverians, the Royal Marriage Act and the attitude of the Church of England on marriage, the author suggests the King's morganatic marriage would have been the proper solution of the problem.

Hull spoke emphatically to place America's moral influence at this time before a Europe rendered uneasy by Hitler's mobilization of 1,000,000 men for manoeuvres near the Prussian and Czechoslovakian borders.

He said a clear-cut issue is before the world:

Military Force or Moral Restraint

"The first of the alternatives way leads through military adventuring to international lawlessness, the result of which is chaos and loss of the previous values which, through centuries of struggle, toil and sacrifice, civilized nations have slowly achieved.

"The other way leads, through the exercise of moral restraint and observance of international obligations and treaties to conditions of order based on law, giving security and facilitating progress."

A very interesting report was given by Senior Regent York who was the local delegate for the Conference of the L.O.O.M. held in the Royal York Hotel, Toronto. Miss Katherine Smith, Grand Recorder of the Order, visited her pleasure at once more being able to join with the Canadian Co-Workers and received personally all the delegates giving information regarding committee work.

A souvenir of the Conference was won by Co-Worker Philip. Vice President Holland received a beautiful bouquet. Co-Worker Mossman won the Sunshine prize donated by Past Senior Regent Wells. A social evening is planned for the month of September and at that time the fall work will be discussed.

Show a Child His Habits Are Bad

Mirror Worked Well in Correcting Table Manners of Youth

(By LISA GRENELLE)

BOB'S TABLE manners really were terrible, and nothing Mother could say or Father could do seemed to improve them much.

"Bobby, will you please keep your mouth shut while you chew," Mother would say wearily time after time.

"If you can't learn to eat like a civilized human being instead of a pig, Bob," Father would say, "you will have to eat alone."

"If you could only see yourself, Bob," Mother said one day.

"He shall see himself," Father said, and went to get a mirror. Very cleverly Father arranged the mirror opposite Bob's place, so that Bob could see himself.

Bob, though at the rough and tough age, was not completely without fastidiousness, although he never would have admitted it. Nor would he have admitted that he found his own eating habits, when pictured in moving detail before him, almost as revolting as Father found them.

Couldn't Avoid It

Still clinging to the conviction that good table manners were a waste of time, the important thing being to get the food in, Bob tried to avoid watching the process, but tried to keep his eyes on his plate.

But so cleverly had Father placed the mirror that no matter where Bob kept his eyes, they seemed only able to view the dreadful spectacle of his own revolting method of consuming food.

"Gee!" Bob explained finally. "They are pretty terrible."

Sleepy, without comment after that his manners improved, until he Father would have expressed it, he was eating "almost like a civilized human being."

It was then the silent but eloquent mirror to convince Bob of the importance of good table manners.

Mother's reproaches and Father's reminands had been annoying. Sometimes even alarming, but afterward soon forgotten.

It is far more tactful, as well as effective, to lead Junior to a mirror and let him see for himself than to tell him his face is dirty.

Never tell a child when you can think of any way of showing him. What he is told he will very too often forgets, sometimes resents. But what he has seen he remembers and can't resist, for the too personal emphasis is removed.

Fashion Flashes

(By ALICE ALDEN)

A GOOD COMPANION for the traveller is a smart coat of natural beige woollen with a contrasting collar of beaver. Beaver buttons and tabs on the cuffs add to the interest of this coat which is fitted in front but has much fullness in back.

You will find when you come to think about Winter coats that many shops have a bright thought. They are showing slim, untrimmed wool coats for daytime and these are sold with their own separate fur collars, the fur making a warm winter garment.

Growing up in height are those platform shoes that smart women are wearing. One of the latest to model has a strap top of black satin while the edge of the platform sole is packed solidly with vari-colored stones in jewel tones.

Going places together we find the "sweet spenders" in the new postage stamp hat. A delightful doll hat is of black velvet with an edge of tiny ostrich tips in violet, purple, cyclamen and black. All purple tones are good this year.

A good choice for those hot August and September days in town is a dirndl-type frock of black silk chiffon with low square neck and short sleeves edged with the bodice. A wide midriff section of black satin is an interesting feature.

More than 130 vessels are under construction in Japanese shipyards. Argentina expects its cotton crop will nearly double that of last year.

Wear Bright Hues To Enhance Beauty

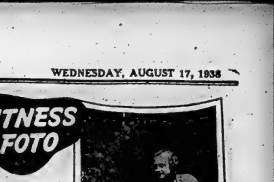
(By HELEN POLLETT)

BE COLOR wise. It is a colorful season, so take advantage of it. Don't be afraid to dress yourself in radiant hues. If you are young, they will make you look prettier. If you are middle-aged, they will make you look younger. If you are old, they will be a consolation to your soul.

Away with black, dull grays, characterless greens and all drab tones in between! Nature doesn't suffer from color fear; why should her children? Look at the flowers in the fields, the rainbow in the sky.



The little mousey girl with dry hair is especially in need of color. She may wear red tones, bright hues or jade green. If she'll go on a wild color "binge", she will become radiant, be as gay as a robin in the spring.

I'm all for cheerful attire, rich, bright hues. They make you forget that the landlord has to be faced on the first of the month, and the grocer paid off. Children love them. They help to see their mother looking young and pretty.

Sometimes even a small change in diet banish the dull shuffle off a pound or two a week.

Cut down on the usual amount of sugar, starches and sugar in your coffee. Be strong and determined when the luncheon hour is passed around. Eat no cereals, take bread toasted, drink buttermilk. Avoid fried foods. Eat raw vegetables—lettuce, cabbage, carrots, turnips—and take plenty of fruit juices. Drink six glasses of water a day, sleep at least seven hours.

Considering what the summer sun does to the hair, it is high time we now to resume oil treatments. If you can't find time for these beneficial lubrications at the beauty shop, heat some olive oil the night before the shampoo. Friction it into the scalp, rub it over the ends of your glorious crown.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

She Wanted to Test His Feelings For Her

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I met a young man of 26 years and liked him at once. He said he liked me, too, but I couldn't let well enough alone, and pretended to be angry with him, just to test his feelings for me. I made up with him again, but now he doesn't even bother to come over. He got himself a new girl, however, in short order after I staged that "mad".

He told my girl chum that he doesn't like her since she is so short. Ha ha one. Do you think there is any way of getting him back?

Sorry.

As he's told your friend he likes you better than the new girl, it looks as if your chances of being restored in his favor—after he has staged his reprisals—are very good, indeed. But my dear, if you do make up, drop these foolish "tests" which you probably picked up at the movies or in some story.

Do you happen to remember the romantic poem of the lady who, to test her lover's devotion, threw her glove into the lion's den. The gallant went into the den and got the glove. The poem concluded with: "He threw the glove, but not in love Right in the lady's face."

Tests like this are fine on the screen, but rather stuff in real life.

Question of Adoption

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My husband and I have been married ten years, and are very much disappointed that we have no children. We'd like to adopt a little boy, but have heard of adopted children turning out badly. How would you advise us to safe-guard ourselves against this?

Childless

One can never be sure as to one's own children, or how well they are going to turn out. But if a child is properly reared in a decent home where the parents have standards and there is no quarrelling and a few ideals, the chances are the child will grow up a credit to the parents and the State.

An adopted child should be told that it is adopted. A good many letters from adopted children have been printed in this column, and they have felt, in not being told they were adopted, that they had not been treated fairly.

Praise Can Make Life Happier

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My wife is a good woman, but she never gives me encouraging word. Sometimes when I work so hard at an evening job to make a little extra money, I feel that she might say something to encourage me. But she never does.

I spoke to my mother about this the other evening, and she said: "Do you ever praise your wife's housekeeping, or the way she brings up the children, or what a thoroughly good woman she is?" And when I came to think about it, I couldn't remember any bouquets I had thrown at her. Do you think this is the reason she never compliments me?

Inquiring

Everyone likes "an encouraging word," as the cowboy ditty "Home on the Range" put it. Why not start in this very day and throw a few bouquets? I'm sure you'll get more in return. Bouquet for bouquet, brickbat for brickbat, seems to be the inevitable law. A little flattery is certainly a pleasant luxury.

AT THE BELLE

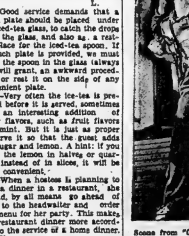
"The Shopworn Angel" and "Star Company

Moviegoers who like their adventures spiced with comedy, thrills and romance will be drawn to "Star Company" a new romantic mystery which is one of two features on the Belle program.

The plot concerns the efforts of an ultra-modern married couple, played by Melvyn Douglas and Florence Rice, to break up the activities of a gang of jewel thieves who book gang. They combine married love and a business career by tracking down the suspects to a murder.

When the couple are captured by jewelers in the gang they begin to fight and laugh with their captors that finally enables them to escape and reach the police.

This laugh and thrill a minute picture has a strong comedy and thrilling performers as Claire Dodd, Sheppard Strudwick, Linda Calhoun, Nat Pendleton and Douglas Dumbrille.



Edward Bassell, who recently directed "Paradise for Three", has handled his scenes comedy and action touches to the picture.

"The Shopworn Angel", which is the second feature attraction, portrays a background which shows the film deals of war time soldiers as they marched away in 1917.

While the new film has a war theme it does not go into the battle scenes but stacks the problem from the inside, showing the loves of three people in various walks of life.

Margaret Sullavan does her finest emotional acting as the girl with a hard-boiled past who married a naive soldier boy on the eve of his departure for France.

James Stewart is seen as the bewildered young lumberman who falls in love with the gold-digging show-

Scene from "Crime School" starring Humphrey Bogart and the girl, unaware that she has an admirer in the person of Walter Plogg, soon, man about town. Both actors play their roles expertly, adding fascinating comedy to a drama of realism.

Nat Pendleton Alan Curtis and Sara Haden present a revealing picture of three soldiers, nameless so as to depict the average American who fought in the last war. Others in uniformly good performances are Walter McGrail, Eleanor Lynn and Charlie D. Brown.

Musical numbers are pleasing and authentic of the 1917 period. Director H. C. Potter keeps the picture moving at a fine tempo.

"What do you think?" An unusual and interesting topical reel will be presented on the same program.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Racketeers in Exile"

"Racketeers in Exile", Columbia's dramatic story of a public enemy who makes religion a racket and then fails prey to his own fake, eloquent preachings, climaxing his career with a vicious attack on crime, opening at the McCarthy theatre.

George Bancroft heads the large cast as "Big Bill" Waldo, a topflight gangster, with Evelyn Venable as his home town sweetheart and Jonathan Hale as the big city "moll" appearing opposite him.

The film's exciting story begins when Waldo returns to his native town to cover by G-men. They hide out in the small town where Waldo, as the son of a minister, spents his youth. Here he stumbles upon a brand new racket. While speaking in his father's church, Waldo finds he has the gift of oratory. Chuckling broadly, he starts a "church" in the country as a fake evangelist, cashing in on the misguided faith of his followers. His next gambit is the in-

AT THE CAPITOL

"Crime School"

Aside from the fact that it is a startling, true-to-life story with wide social implications, "Crime School," the Warner Bros. picture at the Capitol there would be the sure-fire success it undoubtedly is for any one of the three reasons.

Probably most impressive of these reasons—in the opinion of the reviewer at least—is the acting, as a group and singly, of the all boy cast. New York, as ever, is so notable in both the stage and screen versions of "Dead End."

If there ever was any belief that their previous success was merely a happy accident, it is certainly dissipated by their work in "Crime School." Every one of them—Billy Halop, Bobby Jordan, Huntz Hall, Leo Gorcey, Bernard Punsley and Gabriel Dell—proves again that he is a real character actor. Teamed with young Halop in this instance carrying off top honors, not necessarily because of it, is the trouper than the others but because he was lucky enough to have the part with the best opportunities.

Equally as remarkable as the work of the boys is the surprising sympathy and understanding extracted by Humphrey Bogart who leads the adult members of the cast, from the first hero role he has ever had in motion pictures.

And then there is Cully Page, who makes her motion picture debut in this production. She's a little bit Bankhead, a little bit from radio, for she has real acting ability and a personality glowing with glamour.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 17 (CP)—The market idled along most of the day without any definite trend apparent on the Toronto exchange. Industrials attracted slight interest and attention focused on selective mining issues. Volume was 337,000 shares at the end of the third hour.

Soft spot in the mining list was Waite Amulet which followed up a 40-point slide yesterday with another sharp drop. Traders were pessimistic over the company's report for the first six months of the current year. Jellicoe and Preston were favorites in the light trading.

Firmness in Smelters and Noranda reflected better copper prices in London. Nickel generally clung to the upside.

Strength in steels was a feature among industrials. National Steel Car was particularly impressive, at one time boarding a gain of 2½ points.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 17 (AP) — The week's rally in the stock market levelled off today into a slow, indefinite drift.

Trading came almost to a halt as the recovery lost heading on the climb up the recovery road in the forenoon. However, most shares held the greater part of last night's with active issues showing advances of fractions to more than two points near the final hour. Transactions were about 600,000 shares.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford
By Financial Service

Some of the latest buying power that is expected to exist in the market should be ready to be felt before long, as the decline of the past ten days should attract large investment demand. Many people have been hanging back with the setback to enable them to get aboard their favorites, but if the past is any criterion, they will wait for a good recovery first before taking action.

The better demand for the shares of Royalite Oil was, of course, due directly to the announcement that production in the Turner Valley had been raised from 27 to 46 per cent. The bullish point in connection with this is that it was brought about "to meet a situation caused by a quick upturn in the market for Turner Valley oil."

One of the most heartening factors about the present market is that when a rally develops, stocks become active and consequently it requires only a moderate buying power to bring about appreciable advances. The market at the moment is at a stage where declines will be few and rallies sharp. Consequently, the long side of the market would appear to offer more possibilities than the short side, and about the best advice that can be offered is to purchase stocks on good setbacks.

Maybe it is the heat, or maybe it is the humidity, but whatever it is, the market of late has been a somewhat disheartening affa'r for those worthies on the advance. That a substantial buying power exists is indicated by recent developments, but this buying power is remaining so much as an active and rising market.

The averages have declined to about the June 30th level, thus wiping out a major portion of the recent advance. Despite the fact that many quarters are still recommending a cautious market attitude, it would appear as if the acquisition of stocks on a scale from current prices should result in good profits before the end of the year.

International Petroleum's output from Peru and Colombia in July amounted to 2,918,189 barrels, a decrease of 17,861 barrels from the same month last year, but above the first seven months of 1938, Pete's figures 434,859 from the same period of 1937.

Strength in Robert Mitchell yesterday was due to the filling of a sizeable order. Sales yesterday are reported to have emanated from informed quarters. The company is operating at a high rate and the earnings outlook for the present year is distinctly promising.

Does YOUR System Make Excess Acid?

Acid Indigestion, Colds, Headaches, Bilious Attacks, Constipation OFTEN START THIS WAY

Some people are what are known as acid-eaters. They can't help it—and often they don't know it. The result of an excess of acid and some time just ordinary stomach trouble — but they to put right by ordinary stomach remedies! Excess acid may be the reason why you wake up bad, with bleary-eyed, bilious — and the reason why fierce purgatives only leave you in the grip of a weakening cold and the same old symptoms.

But there's one thing that acid can't face. That's the neutralizing power of Vange Salts, the alkaline remedy with the natural mineral ash action. A teaspoonful in warm water surges through your system just like the medicinal spring water far away in England where Vange Salts come from. Excess acid is neutralized quickly, painlessly. Your blood is purified of poisons. Your sore stomach walls are soothed. And that mass of hard, poisonous waste matter lying in your intestines is softened gently, naturally, and passed out of your body. Is that like you feel good! It's marvellous! But the most marvellous thing is that Vange Salts are only 60 cents a tin! At your druggist now—but if you're wise, on your bathroom shelf tonight!

RETIRED OFFICER OF NAVY OF U.S. CRUISES UP BAY

Lt. Commander Earle And Wife From Far Hawaii Visits Quinte District in 25-Foot Cruiser—Shipped From Honolulu

From far away Hawaii, Lieutenant Commander O. B. Earle, retired from United States Navy, and his wife are visiting in this district in their modern cruiser, the Humuhumunukunuapua, their home port is at Kealakekua, Bay, Hawaii.

Passing up the Bay of Quinte in their boat this week, Lieutenant Commander Earle and wife are en route to Georgian Bay via Petroborough through the Trent Canal system, thence to Michigan and Chicago.

They will travel from that point down the Illinois and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans, and thence home.

"I sailed in the United States Navy for a good many years, but I'm just beginning to learn how to sail on inland waters," said Commander Earle. "This is a new trip for us and we are enjoying every minute of it.

Interesting travellers, the former navy officer and wife arrived on from New York on July 12 travelled through the New York barge canal to Oswego, passed through the Thousand Islands to Alexandria Bay and then journeyed up the Bay of Quinte to the local port, halted here briefly and then went on to Trenton.

Their ambitious trip by water not only has taken them with their modern but small cruiser. Of 25-foot length, it is built of Honduras mahogany and shipped to Seattle, Washington in 1935. That year the couple cruised on the waters of the British Columbia coast for a 77-day period. The following two years they departed the water for overland travel, but found it tedious and not so much interfered to the water travel.

Their boat with the lengthy title was named after a pretty fish common in the waters of their home port, which literally translated means "Little fish with a nose like a pig."

CRICKET ARMY FROM THE WEST VISITS FRONT ST.

Staffs of Two Business Places Sweep Out Invaders

INSECTS DESTRUCTIVE

A plague of large, brown crickets which in their unwonted thousands have invaded summer homes and permanent residences along the front of the Bay of Quinte during the past two weeks, eating holes in clothing and blankets, making their way into the depths of upholstered furniture, nibbling at curtains and pillows, bringing considerable annoyance to residents, has spread to the city. It was revealed by a fight with the insect hordes staged by the crews of two uptown businesses last evening.

Crashing and hopping in brown waves of motion, the crickets attempted to enter the business places, but were as promptly swept back by employees armed with brooms.

Other homes, especially in the southern sections of the city report the recent invasion by the fiddling pests, but none has had the excitements of rout drawn attention to their presence by their chirping far into the night.

The insects have been identified by Professor W. A. Ross of the Dominion Entomological Bureau as Mormon crickets. Like those which have made life miserable recently for Oshawa and lakeshore city residents, they have come to stay, we do, either, about the insects, except that they are the concern of the local organization of the Sudeten Germans.

They seem always to forget that it is impossible to Czechize 2,500,000 Germans who are living in this region, that it is impossible to reduce them to misery, to take away the land they possess and to deprive them of their high German sentiment and democratic party laws declared.

Henlein paid tribute to the youths of German blood living in Czechoslovakia and said that they had been in the Reich they desired peace and proved this by their unshakable discipline.

Mayor Bone Receives Letter From E. V. 'Gene' Ilsley

In a letter received this week by Mayor Jamieson Bone from Mr. E. V. Ilsley, former manager of the Bay of Quinte and Canadian Board of Commerce, and recently promoted to the Seattle, Washington, branch of the Bank of Montreal, considerable attention is paid by Mr. Ilsley to the cost of taxes as they differ between Canadian and United States cities.

Mr. Ilsley writes his friend Mayor Bone:

"Dear Jimmie: This limitation of the powers of the city council to borrow they have restrained from taxing at over 40 mills, has worked out to the greatest advantage of the citizens and taxes are surprisingly low in this city (Seattle). One can readily see that it would preclude many civic spendings that go on regardless of any wishes of the new Yorx barge canal to Oswego, passed through the Thousand Islands to Alexandria Bay and then journeyed up the Bay of Quinte to the local port, halted here briefly and then went on to Trenton.

Their ambitious trip by water not only has taken them with their modern but small cruiser. Of 25-foot length, it is built of Honduras mahogany and shipped to Seattle, Washington in 1935. That year the couple cruised on the waters of the British Columbia coast for a 77-day period. The following two years they departed the water for overland travel, but found it tedious and not so much interfered to the water travel.

Their boat with the lengthy title was named after a pretty fish common in the waters of their home port, which literally translated means "Little fish with a nose like a pig."

Belleville members of the famous Kilties Band that toured the world years ago were guests of Mr. Ivan Power, had an opportunity the last two days to view one of their former bandsmen in action.

Gene Lockhart now a famed Hollywood character actor and former Kilties bandsman, played the part of a U.S. Senator in the picture "Lucky Partners" that played at the Capitol Theatre early this week. Mr. Lockhart, in a letter to his former band "buddies" read during the recent banquet held at the Bay of Quinte Country Club, told members of his success in the movies.

CAN'T 'CZECHIZE' SUDETENGERMANS SAYS K. HENLEIN

Runciman's Effort to Reach Solution Now Complicated

MEETING BREAKS DOWN

Praha, Aug. 17 (C.P.-Havas) — Viscount Runciman's efforts to reach a solution of Czechoslovakia's thorny minority problem, were complicated today by a warning from Konrad Henlein, leader of the pro-Nazi Sudeten German party, that it was impossible to "Czechize" the 3,500,000 German living in the Czechoslovak frontiers.

The warning followed a meeting between Great Britain's unofficial adviser to Czechoslovakia and five prominent members of Henlein's party. Lord Runciman conferred on the Sudeten demands with Konrad Henlein, president of the Sudeten German parliamentary group; Franz Reader, Karl Hermann Frank, Sudeten German deputies; Dr. Hensch Schiekrand, leading Sudeten German lawyer, and Dr. Wilhelm Sebekowski, one of Henlein's principal lieutenants.

Another complication was placed in the path of Lord Runciman's efforts by the death of Rev. Andru, head of the Slovak Catholic People's party. The 73-year-old clergyman-politician had been the spokesman for the Slovak autonomist group since the Great War.

Writing in a special edition af the Hitler Youth Review, devoted to the Sudeten problem, Henlein protested against the concern of the other nationalities over the internal organization of the Sudeten Germans.

They seem always to forget that it is impossible to Czechize 2,500,000 Germans who are living in this region, that it is impossible to reduce them to misery, to take away the land they possess and to deprive them of their high German sentiment and democratic party laws declared.

Henlein paid tribute to the youths of German blood living in Czechoslovakia and said that they had been in the Reich they desired peace and proved this by their unshakable discipline.

TRENTON and DISTRICT

Trenton, Aug. 17 (Special)—Falling far short of plans and expectations, the much-ballyhooed C. P. R. Old Home Week here, which began on Saturday became a realization of disappointment when a two hundred arriving when it had been hoped and felt that seven or eight thousand might be on hand. Earlier ideas that a twelve-car train would be necessary to convey visitors to coaches "pulled in at the siding near the Benedict-Proctor plant shortly before noon on Saturday when the fair may have lacked in numbers it certainly lacked in enthusiasm, and a good time was more than had by all who attended. Members of the local committee went out of their way to make the day a success, and the fine display of local tradespeople hung out flags and a banner of welcome to greet the visitors.

At Bayshore Park benches and tables were provided for picnic lunches, and many more of the arrivals had come with basket dinners and lunches. During the afternoon the R.C.A.F. silver band led the visitors, and entertained excellent musical selections for the music lovers, and also a diamond in the smith's Falls nine answered the honors and the trophy by taking the Trenton team by 13-8. A program of races for young and old was run off during the afternoon being given, most of them donated by local merchants and manufacturers and by the C.P.R. as amplifying equipment. Many favorable comments were made by those visitors took their leave in the evening, and local C.P.R. organizers are already at work on plans for next year's meeting which the hope to have a chance to talk over mutual problems with the C.P.R. general chief executive as they drive from Kingston to the site of the dedication of the new Thousand Islands International Bridge.

The projected negotiations for a new trade agreement between the two countries and the prospects of initiating the St. Lawrence Deep Waterway project may be among the matters discussed.

Due to pressure of work and absence of a number of ministers from Ottawa, Mr. King has postponed his trip to Western Canada until September 1, when he expects to spend a week at the earliest. He had hoped to go west in September.

Fresh Egg Prices Up Due Scarcity

Toronto, Aug. 17—Marked improvement was seen in Canada's exports of cheese last week. The gain of 3,833 boxes, representing 650,000 pounds, over the corresponding week of 1937 brought the decrease for the current year to date down to approximately 6.6 million pounds from 7.3 million pounds during the course of last week. Number of boxes shipped for the week ended Aug. 13 totalled 53,334, as compared with 21,851 in the preceding week and 34,601 a year ago. For the period May 1 to Aug. 31, shipments amounted to 29,677 tons this year and 378,205 boxes last year.

Scarcity in fresh eggs sent values higher on the local produce market yesterday. Butter eased slightly, but chese remained steady.

Better prices in Montreal and Toronto encouraging egg shipments to that point and minimizing fresh supplies on the spot market here. As a result dealers experienced some difficulty in filling immediate requirements of buyers. Advances ranged to a full cent per dozen on top grades, traded sentments traded at 30c for grade A-large, 29c for medium, 26c for A and 21c for C grades, while undergraded eggs brought 24c for grade A-large, 23c for medium, 20c for B's and 16c for C grades. The retail section was unchanged.

Demand was sufficient to keep fresh receipts clear on the butter market at the easier quotations. Ontario creamery solids moved at 25c to 25½c, and No. 1 grades, 22 1-4c to 22½c for 36 score and 21 1-2c to 21 3-4c for 38 score.

There was nothing moving out of cold storage, it was reported. One point stated a fair quantity of Western make sold at 24 1-4c. Retail sales are holding up well at the present price. Prices changed hands at 25c to 25½c for top grades and 24 1-4c for 36 score, unchanged from the previous day.

Cheese presented a quiet market at steady rates. New large specified, was offered in wholesale channels at 16c to 16 1-4c, twins at 14 1-4c to 14½c and triplets at 14½c to 14 3-4c.

Cheese Is Demand at Montreal

Montreal, Aug. 17 (CP)—Demand for cheese improved on keen procedure marketing Tuesday, according to Dominion Department of Agriculture reports. Prices rated 1-4c. High-grade egg receipts, however, declined, and prices increased about a ¼c, while the lower grade eggs held steady.

Creamery butter prices to retail and jobbers were up 2c and solids for 24c to 24½c.

Western butter offered here was offered at 22 1-4c to 22½c. Quebec No. 1 pasteured price to jobbers was 23c. Receipts: 1,222 boxes.

Cheese sold at 14 1-4c a pound for Ontario white and colored, 13 7-8c for Quebec white and 14c for Quebec colored. Receipts: 1,647 boxes, including 306 for export.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases sold at 28c a dozen for A-large, 27½c for A-medium, 24c for B and 21c for C. Receipts: 1,-711 cases.

MR. KING READY TO MEET PRESIDENT

May Talk Over Problems as They Ride From Kingston to Ivy Lea

Ottawa, Aug. 17—(CP)— Prime Minister Mackenzie King returned today to the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial relations and he is expected to be busy assisting a Dominion Provincial Conference on financial and taxation matters.

The Commission was never expected to complete in a fact-finding body, said Mr. King, as he indicated the importance the Federal Government attached to the commission's inquiry despite the attacks of the provincial Premiers.

The Dominion-Provincial Conference, Mr. King indicated, would be a representative meeting of the governments of the Dominion.

"The commission," he said, "should be able to make a most valuable report—just what will be needed in dealing with matters which must be considered at the representative conference."

Trade Agreement Negotiations

The Prime Minister said he expected to discuss trade with President Roosevelt at Kingston tomorrow. He indicated also he called a cabinet meeting yesterday he hoped to have a chance to talk over mutual problems with the American chief executive as they drive from Kingston to the site of the dedication of the new Thousand Islands International Bridge.

Rupert's Rifles Increase Margin in American League; Corbys Extend City Series

Yankees' Lead Now 8 Games, Winning Pair from Senators With Gomez, Ruffing Hurling

Rupert's Rifles Should Coast to Pennant From Here

PIRATES WIN

Hold Five Game Lead in National by Beating Reds

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR.

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York Yankees, a team of one-man tradition, are pulling together now and as a result they're likely to win the American League pennant by a margin big enough to satisfy even Col. Jacob Ruppert. The Colonel isn't satisfied while there's another club within shouting distance of the Yanks.

Lefty Gomez and Charley Ruffing didn't need all the runs they got yesterday to dispose of the fourth-place Washington Senators. They pitched a pair of six-hitters to win by the comfortable margins of 18-1 and 6-2.

Jake Powell, back from the 10-day suspension that resulted from his remarks during a broadcast interview, also probably could have dispensed with a few pop bottles that came his way. He was subjected to a glass shower that caused a five-minute delay as the field could be cleared during the second game.

The Yankees had a nine-run fourth inning in the opener, and Dimaggio and Lou Gehrig his homers.

Lead of Eight Games

The twin triumph stretched New York's lead to eight games as Cleveland took a single decision from St. Louis Browns, 8-5 to give Mel Harder his 16th mound victory. The Athletics drove Boston's Red Sox still deeper into third, beating them 11-11 after hitting Jim Bagby for five runs in the first and Dick Mitchell for five in the sixth. Two homers by Jimmy Foxx couldn't make up for those two innings. The Chicago White Sox-Detroit clash was rained out.

Manager Pie Traynor of Pittsburgh decided to give some of his weary pirates a rest and benched Gus Suhr and Al Todd in favor of Bill Brubaker and Ray Berres. Brubaker made Dana Dale's debut a homer, and the Bucs walloped Cincinnati 10-5 to stretch their National League lead to five games.

Dodgers Rout Giants

Brooklyn's Dodgers beat the second place New York Giants for the second time in 13 encounters, 7-3, combing Harry Gumbert and Dick Coffman for five hits and four runs in the ninth. Chicago's Cubs split a twin bill with St. Louis Cardinals, winning the opener 5-4 in 11 innings on Frank Demaree's triple, then losing the second to Curt Davis, 5-2.

Another 11-inning struggle saw the Phillies beat Boston Bees 7-6 when Chuck Klein singled home Herschel Martin with the winning run.

'Ambers And Armstrong Meet Tonight in New York

New York, Aug. 17 (AP)—If they don't melt down and run off in a puddle, Henry Armstrong and Lou Ambers will gang up on each other for 15 rounds in Madison Square Garden tonight with Ambers' 135-pound title at stake.

It promises to be a fast event, with upward of 15,000 onlookers stuck to their seats in the big Eighth Avenue Emporium.

One thing is certain, rain cannot interfere with the festivities as it did last Wednesday night at the Polo Grounds, when Promoter Mike Jacobs swallowed a $10,000 installation loss and hoped he could get it back indoors.

The postponement has not affected the betting odds. The men with talking money still are offering up to 8-5 that Armstrong leaves the ring the holder of the featherweight, lightweight and welterweight championships, the first triple-plated 'crown wearer in boxing history.

If Ambers should win, he will not be recognized as the welterweight champion in New York State. The Commission pulled the rival managers and Promotor Jacobs in on the carpet yesterday and made them sign, an amendment to the original contract, stipulating that "no title except the lightweight is at stake."

Sports Roundup

By EDDIE BRIETZ

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 17 (AP)—Jake Mintz, Pittsburgh boxing fan, just signed Cocoa Kid and Charlie Burly to fight for the "negro championship of the world"..... What do they think Henry Armstrong is?..... Mintz..... As soon as Baron Von Cramm, the tennis star, gets out of clink in Germany, he is expected to hop aboard a dash over here for a cash and carry tour..... Promoter Herman (Muggs) Taylor of Philly, who dropped $15,000 when they called off Galento and John Henry Lewis, has promoted himself another bank roll and was spotted in the spots last night.

Some weeks ago Mr. Bill Terry sounded off as to how unwerried he was about those Pirates..... Then he proceeded to get himself a second baseman..... He hasn't said much about the Corsairs lately, but we can't help but notice he has added a third baseman.....

Here is a big inning what was one..... In a Kitty League game between Jackson (Tenn.) and Paris (Ky.) the other day, every man on the Jackson team scored in the first inning..... Jackson tallied 11 times in all in that frame, nine of them being an out were made..... Old Kid Eczerlid, former stormy petrel of the Southern Association, now piloting Fulton, must have been fit to be tied after that wild frame..... Jimmy Wilson of the Phils, had his greatest season with a black bat he bought in a drug store for 98¢ cents. The drug store then went out of business and Jimmy broke the bat.

NEWARK HURLERS HAVING TROUBLE

Only Two of Staff Seem Able to Finish Games

(By The Associated Press)

All that glitters isn't gold and all those fine percentages on the Newark pitching staff don't mean that the Bears' hurling corps is going to gradually fade as the big leagues en masse next season.

Far from it. Outside of Marius Russo and Atley Donald, the left-handed-and right-handed standbys of the staff, Johnny Nesin's boys are having plenty of trouble finishing ball games.

The weakness cropped up last night as the Bears barely outlasted Toronto Maple Leafs, 6-4. Nesin halted the game for an hour and made the ground unplayable for the scheduled second contest.

Before the seven innings were over, the Bears had sent four pitchers to the hill, Nick Strincevich, John Fallon, Phil Lage and John Hutcheon.

Elsewhere in the league the hurling was about the last night. Jake Mooty, a fine Syracuse prospect, pitched Jersey City's 3-0 complete-game win over Buffalo. The Bisons' Mickey Haslin checked Red Wings into a clean sweep over Jersey City, beating the Giants, 2-1, in the nightcap after the Wings had taken the opener, 6-2. Baltimore's double bill with Buffalo was rained out after two innings of the opener.

C. Harris Hurls Two-Hitter Corbys Defeat Pointers 4-0

Facing Elimination The Winners Played Splendid Ball

PLAY AGAIN TONIGHT

With Connie Harris hurling two hit ball the Corbys A.C. played errorless softball behind his offerings to blank the Point Anne "cementmen" 4 to 0 at Coleman Flats last evening, thus clinging tenaciously to a spot in the City Softball finals.

With the "cementmen" gaining the verdict in the initial two games of a best in three series, Chuck Barnett's Corbys were faced with elimination last night, but with their backs to the wall the "Play Corbys" ming applied the whitewash brush to Frank Sedore's Ox Point nine to force the issue to at least a fourth game. The scene reverts to Coleman Flats tonight, where the Corbys crew must win to remain in the City Softball picture.

Harris, possessing a fine change of pace, completely baffled the overconfident Point Anne crew, allowing only two hits, doubles by Dickey in the second and Green in the seventh. Only three other Point Anne batsmen reached first base, all via the four ball route. Harris struck out one and issued three passes, but his control was the ability to make the Cementmen pop up or hit easy rollers in the infield which the side in order in the fourth, fifth, sixth, eighth and ninth. Stan Luffman, hurling for Point Anne, only yielded five hits in all but walked five. He only retired the side in order in the sixth and fourth as the Corbys were pressing throughout.

Cy Barrage with two singles in three trips led the winners at bat, while Reid's doubles scored two in the third, after Corbys had clinched up a run in the initial frame by virtue of a walk, Barrage's sacrifice, a passed ball and an error. McMartin scored the winner's remaining counter in the sixth, after singling. Corbys turned in a sterling game defensively, capping off their night's effort with a fast double play, Reid to Cole in the sixth. Both hurlers turned in splendid efforts, with Harris only bearing down in the clutches and winning with apparent ease. Cy Barrage handled six and Fred McGuire five fielding chances without a bobble. Whitehead only booted one in ten chances, however.

Runyan Fires a 66 Round in Practice

Toronto, Aug. 17 (CP)—Golf's first big light invader of the year fired last practice shots over the long fairways at Mississaga Club today on the eve of the Canadian Open.

The shooting starts in earnest tomorrow when the 72-hole medal tournament begins. Most of the passes big names from two practices and a few from farther away are included in the entry list of close to 100.

Paul Runyan, who isn't of the game but always is, finished up his approaching and putting magic Saturday for a six shooting 66 per. He dropped six birdies.

The little pro from White Plains, N.Y., was two strokes over the course record, set by Gordon Brydson, Mississaga pro. He was two under the Mississaga competitive mark set by Percy Alis of Kingland in winning the Open in 1921.

Right hand Runyan among the spectacular players are Dave Ferguson, pro at the Elms, Toronto, and Tony Manero, a former U. S. titlist, who scored 67.

In a club close to New York there is a team of amateurs who do very well when playing on their home course in friendly matches. Up to date they haven't performed

Robert Berger, of Omaha, Neb., pictured as he received the congratulations of his father, and officials after winning first prize in the all-American soap box derby finals at Akron, Ohio. A crowd estimated at 150,000 watched the race. A Canadian entry, from Belleville, Ont., took third place in the international event.

CALLING 'EM Between the Lines with Ken J. Collins

It begins to look as though Promoter Mike Jacobs and his associates are in for a sweet financial beating as promoters of the Lou Ambers-Henry Armstrong fight, to be staged at Madison Square Garden tonight. Armstrong is such a large favorite that the fight fans are refusing to pay $16.50 top prices for seeing lightweight title. It is usually the top price for world's championship heavyweight bouts and is believed to be one of the paramount reasons for the falling off of the resale of tickets for the tonight's scrap. The fact that Armstrong beat Barney Ross and there no doubt has taken its toll, as Ross was a welterweight and naturally the paying public feel the "little dark lad" will have less trouble with the lightweight title holder. Armstrong's welterweight crown will be at stake, also and the setting in Ambers's favour is the fact he has not been knocked out since gaining ring prominence, but if Armstrong continues to pur feather his nest as he has the past, Ambers think the steel girders in Madison Square Garden will have descended with force upon his noggin".

As quietly as he came to Belleville, Fred Hicken, former physical director of the Y.M.C.A., left the city ourowis in the same fashion. Fred has accepted a similar post with the Y.M.C.A. in the west western section in Belleville was highly appreciated by all who came under his direction. Mr. Hicken introduced boxing and wrestling here at the local "Y" and his leaving has been keenly felt by many who we have ever contacted since his announcement of his retirement in Belleville. Fred knew his business and not only increased the membership at the "Y" but made it more interesting and more recreational. It is too bad to let such a qualified person slip through our fingers," stated one member of the "Y" yesterday.

Some new methods of catching fish are being employed by local fishermen, we hear. For instance Roy Naylor believes the most certain method is to get right into the water and out-distance the elusive finny beauties. At least it is rumoured he was trying to catch 'lunge in this manner down the bay recently, when the "lunge got the One" crait; he was piloting capsized flying Roy on a real ducking. But he's no worse off than Eddie Shapiro, who experienced the same medicine in Belleville while playerel fishing recently. But the tit-bit and climax of all goes to Harold "Pop" Woodiv, who holds somewhat of a fishing record out at Sloan's Lake.

"Pop" caught an eight pound 3 ounce pickerel, the second largest Sloan's Lake has had. But "Pop" he doesn't tell about failing into the lake, while trying to scoop an over-amount of minnows though.

The psychology of sport was vividly and most paramountly exemplified last night when Destiny turned on Point Anne and administered the early whitewashing of the season City softball play-offs. The mere fact that Art Cote, erstwhile slugger of Chuck Barnett's team, was back in the lineup undoubtedly proved the difference between victory and defeat. Not that Art really hooked any fences last night, but the fact he had returned to the lineup had his effects on the morale of the Corbys outfit. Of course Cole's appearance at first also strengthened the previously weakened Corbys, as Reid returned to fill the gap at the hot corner, and Corbys did not commit a single error.

Although Chuck Barnett's crowd played errorless ball, much of the credit goes to Connie Harris' one hit hurling. Harris was mixing them up nicely and seldom permitting the pill for a killing. A two hit game is always something to talk about, so Harris gets the nod. The night the Cementmen return to their home diamond and an enthusiastic crowd, the Cementmen should be favorites to cop the rag tonight.

After belittling the efforts of Frank McNulty, Oshawa's much reported rock-skilled flinger the week previous, the Oshawa scribe seems somewhat subdued over the future chances of the Motor City seniors in the C.O.B.L. set-up downs. After last Saturday's pitching effort of McNulty, the Oshawa scribe has the following to say relative to his ability as a pitcher: "He pitched five and one-third innings, was almost invincible, allowing only one scratch single and facing only 16 batters in five frames. Yes, Mr. McNulty may have a lot to learn about who wins the C.O.B.L. this year."

This paragraph might help to elevate the fingers of those attuned hot weather and humidity that has been working overtime of late. We wonder how the old-time hockey fans remember Joe Ruben, former Picton boy who has gone roote some 20 years ago? Joe is residing in Chicago now and the only hockey he sees is the odd game the Black Hawks play. The first person Joe met after the renewing acquaintances, was Conner Arnold. When I was playing for Picton in the old days we used to have some real hockey games. What a riding they used to give me here" he recalled. Incidentally Joe Ruben was an exceptionally good hockey player as we remember him. He's vacationing locally.

The two local lads to compete in the Danforth Business Men's "soap box derby" at Toronto yesterday were their sponsors, Barney Wright was the senior champion and Gerald Craig was walked off with the junior honors. These two boys were given a special all-Toronto title race today. Seems as though Belleville is the headquarters for the Canadian "soap box" racing business and like Akron, Ohio, is a champion. When our teen aged boys are burying themselves building these "skiddle kars", they are always getting into trouble, nor do you see them in our juvenile courts, these are somewhat over-populated these days.

HITTERS & YAM: Billie Whitby's flaming rink is in the final for the Henry Trophy at the Provincial Lawn Bowling Association annual meet. Billie's rink advanced to the finals by eliminating Ottawa yesterday.....Although the Giants are being counted out by many, they are still on their feet and punching, but over in the American loop the Yankees should just about coast in.....Jimmy Braddock, the veteran scrapper, is on the semi-windup bout of tonight's Ambers-Armstrong affair.

Race That Caused Double Suspension

ABOVE is the finish of the $25,000 match race at Del Mar, California, that resulted in boosting the earnings of Seabiscuit to $315,350, and give him fifth place all-time earnings for a race horse, and also resulted in the suspension of Jockey George Woof (alngside) and Noel Richardson, up on Lawsuit, the other ardson, up on Lawsuit, the other horse in the race. The race between C. S. Howard's five-year-old and the South American champion was a battle all the way with a driving finish giving Mr. Howard victory. Track stewards investigated the ride of both jockeys and announced their suspension for the rest of the meeting with a recommendation to the California Horse Racing Board that it be continued until the end of the year.

Shooting two 70's, a 69 and a 71 for a 72-hole total of 280, Ky Laffoon, ABOVE, Chicago golfer, enriched himself by $3,000 by winning the Cleveland open golf tournament finishing one stroke up on Sam Snead and two on Billy Burke.

Falls Upstairs

Things looked rather dark for Wes Ferrell, ABOVE, when he was given his outright release by Washington Senators, after Clarke Griffith, Washington owner, had tried to interest the other clubs in the American league in him. It turned out to be a cloud with a silver lining for Wesley, however, as he promptly signed with the Yankees and helped himself to a slice of almost certain world series cash.

Frisch On Way Out In St. Louis?

Cards' Sorry Showing Said to Have Greased The Skids for Frankie

By GENE KOGUSKI
Central Press Canadian Sports Writer

St. Louis, Aug. 17—Will Frankie Frisch, once one of the greatest second basemen in the major leagues, be retained as manager of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1939?

The question is being asked by fans here as the Cardinals wind up one of the most disastrous seasons they have had in many years.

Sam Breadon, owner of the club, declines to discuss Frisch's case, asserting all questions pertaining to the Cardinals' manager for next season. It is known, however, that Frisch is held in high esteem by Breadon.

Burt Shotton in '39

But the "know-it-all" group of fans believe that Frisch will not be the leaders of the Cardinals in 1939. Rumors have it that Burt Shotton, current pilot of the Columbus team of the American Association, will succeed Frisch.

Shotton acted as Sunday manager for Branch Rickey when the latter was general manager from 1919 to 1925. It is reported that Rickey, now general manager of the Cardinals, has been trying to sell Shotton to Breadon for the past several years.

Speech Recalled

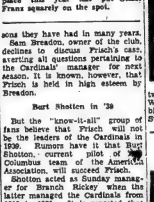
As the Cardinals flounder in the second division for the second consecutive year, Rickey's caustic, a pep talk delivered by Rickey before the chamber of commerce luncheon here last Spring, on that occasion, Rickey said:

"This is the first ball club our organization has ever placed on the field—with the possible exception of the pitching staff."

These rumors regarding the future status of Frisch have spread chiefly because the Cardinals collapsed as a pennant contender this season.

It's an old story—oust the manager when the team falls into the second division.

Frisch has been manager of the Cardinals since July, 1933, when he replaced Gabby Street, current pilot of the St. Louis Browns. Frisch's club won the pennant in 1935, tied with the Cubs for second place in 1936 and wound up fourth last year.



SIT-DOWN STRIKE FOR STREET SWEEPERS

New York, Aug. 17 (AP)—Oppressed by a two-week heat wave, 63 East Side children, all under 11 years old, held a sit-down strike in protest over a shortage of street sweepers. The children, waving American flags and banners inscribed with "Clean streets," squatted on the hot pavement yesterday until American Labor Party workers told them they would ask Mayor LaGuardia to install the sweepers.

Cards' Sorry Showing Said to Have Greased The Skids for Frankie

FRANKIE FRISCH
The Cards' drop to seventh place this year has put Frankie Frantz squarely on the spot.

BURT SHOTTON
Shotton had a spell of managing the Cards here. St. Louis rumors name him to succeed Frisch.

"We Licked That Bum, Joe!"

It was a happy event in one of Philadelphia's hospitals when Joe Jacobs and Tony Galfmio looked at the camera for this picture. The former Nigthingale that's Tony, stricken with pneumonia a few days before h's scheduled fight with John Henry Lewis, has almost recovered and his dire threats of what he will do to say and every fighter in the land are beginning to flow with their old time regularity. Russell, the Mussel (that's Joe), is as happy as his rotund fighter about everything.

Mystery Skeleton Found

The bleached bones of a skeleton have been found by boys of the below grave near Whitby, Ont., and according to acting Chief Constable Thomas, who holds the skull of the "victim" the find may explain the mysterious disappearance 18 years ago o f Ambrose Small, Toronto theatre owner, whose vanishing caused a nation-wide sensation, Toronto police, however, declare that the skull shows no dental condition which does not tally with that of Small as he disappeared.

BACK TO FAMILY

With immigration "red tape" cut, nine-year-old Gerard Richardson, who was held in Boston, Mass, because of his American birth when his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. Richardson, were deported for illegal entry into United States, was permitted to rejoin his family. The Richardsons had resided at Gardner, Mass., until the deportation order was issued, and Canada refused to accept the lad, due to his American birth and the fear that he would become a public charge. He was expected to rejoin his family in New Brunswick.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

It was about that time that Chris had his first talk with Beverly since her marriage. She took him home from the hospital in the limousine. Both of them showed the wear and tear of the fight, and Chris leaned back in his corner and yawned.

"Sorry," she said, "I'm tired, Beverly."

"Of course you know how I feel, Chris. There aren't any words—"

"Don't thank me. I've done a job and been paid for it. That's my business."

She stirred. "Don't be hard, Chris. I can't seem to get near you. You shut me out when I try. Do you hate me so much, or is it just that I don't matter?"

"It's neither," he said stubbornly. "You chose your life, and I had to make one for myself. I don't want to be hurt again. That's all."

"And you're happy in this life of yours?"

"What is happiness, anyhow? I like my work. I'm ambitious. I suppose I'm getting somewhere. It hasn't hurt me, you know, to sign daily bulletins as to your father's condition. Good publicity, my dear. Good ethical publicity!"

The car had stopped at the house and the chauffeur was getting out to open the car door. She flushed and put a hand in his.

"You are lying, Chris," she said softly.

He went into his empty house, angry at himself and at her. Hate was away at the seashore with Harriet Lee, and he had the place to himself, but tired as he was he did not go to bed for some time.

Katie was gone for several weeks, but Chris did not miss her. Work drifted in. He made his calls, went to the hospital, played some golf, came back to quiet summer nights and his pipe. The spectacle of the war a bigger thing than any one had thought. It was going to last longer, too.

He never admitted to himself that Katie's absence was a relief. And Katie herself was supremely contented that summer; contented to waken late, to rock long hours on the hotel veranda, to walk the board-walk with Harriet. Once every day she and Harriet would put on bathing suits, take a dip in the water, and then lie in the sand for an hour or two.

One day Barrett found them there. He was walking past, a youngish man in flannels, and his eyes traveled from Katie's hip to her face. Then he stopped.

"Well!" he said. "If this isn't a piece of luck. Here I am all alone and I happen on beauty in repose."

He was the first man they had spoken to since their arrival, and in a moment he was sitting on the sand beside them. After that he met them there daily. It was all very proper, for there was Harriet, smiling and showing her big front teeth, and half-hoping herself in the sand to hide her thin body. They would go into the water and then Barrett would catch Katie and push her under a wave. She was conscious of a queer excitement when he touched her but she would come up again to be very prim and rather short with him.

Barrett was not fooled. She was ambitious: she wanted no trouble. Certainly she did not care for him. But she had a sexual appeal which kept his interest, and she was not afraid to exploit it. Pretty soon they were on first-name terms.

But beyond that he had made little or no progress when he had to leave her there and go home. He stood on the train platform and waved to her—and Harriet—when they were still.

"The little devil," he said to himself. "The smart little devil!" And went rather complacently back to his growing practice.

It was some time during that interval that Chris went to see Ursula's baby, passed Judith and Letitia's house, now closed but still furnished.

"We took her a little. Not much," said Hiram. "Seemed a pity to tear it up, somehow."

"And the boy's a success?"

"Say, listen—"

The boy was fine, a grave youngster who looked very much like Ursula but with Jerry's blond hair; and Amy looked younger and happier than Chris had ever seen her. They were adopting young Noel legally, and Chris left the next day, knowing that all was well with him. He carried with him a picture of the boy taken by the local photographer on it Amy had written, "Noel Martin Mortimer." When Chris got home, he put it carefully in the drawer of the desk, but first, out of sheer pity that Ursula should have no part in it, he wrote her name on the back and the date of the baby's birth.

Katie came home late in August. She was sunburned and excited, glad to get back and almost too demonstrative.

"Darling!" she said. "How I've missed you! But Harriet was keen on staying, and she couldn't stay alone. You didn't mind, did you?"

When Chris told her something of the Staunton Lewis case, however, she grew thoughtful and slightly hostile.

"I suppose you've been seeing her day after day."

"If you mean, Mrs. Ames, I've seen her, naturally. She's been in trouble."

"In great trouble about her father! Don't make me laugh, Chris. What does she care, or anybody else for that matter?"

"As it happens, she does," he said evenly.

But he could not escape Katie or evade her. She was there, his wife, with her legitimate claims on him, and Katie had repeated in that summer sun, with Barrett beside her, every pose in the bathing suit, whispering little things when Harriet was not listening.

"I'm crazy about you, girl. You know that."

"Don't be silly. I'm not that sort. Here's Harriet."

That night Katie drew Chris down on the living room sofa beside her, and put her head on his shoulder.

"Have you missed me, Chris?"

"We look more like a tomb than ever but I wasn't here much."

"You know what I mean. Oh, Chris, I'm so crazy about you. You do love me, don't you?"

He knew that eventually she would get under his guard; not deliberately but with the instinct of all women to claim their men. And that night he faced honestly the fact that he did not want her then or ever. He wanted no woman, but only his life and his work. By the time she had gone through the complexities of her night dress, bathing, brushing her hair, creaming her face, even dusting a little perfume behind her ears, he was apparently asleep.

She stood for some time in her elaborate nightgown, gazing at him with a small, cold smile. Then she put out the light and got into her own bed.

CHAPTER XXXV.

That autumn was relatively unimportant. Already the crisis following the first war had been passed, and it began to be evident that Europe, in case of a long struggle, would look to look to America for supplies. In his offices Staunton Lewis was over-seeing plants, planned plant expansion, sent a man to London, after Britain were still pinning their faith on shrapnel. The Germans were blitzkrieging Poland, and sooner or later the Allies would need shells and that meant money.

On the strength of that he organized a new company and bought another plant. That was to prove to last. Kitchener had said three years. If it lasted three years—

One day that winter Chris found Jerry Ames in the downtown office. He was much older, the premature age of a man who has lived hard. His dark hair had not changed the ordinary amenities during Lewis's illness, and Chris had not disliked him. But he had never quite forgiven him for his letter in reply to the death about Ursula's death, and now he was coolly civil.

Jerry was slow in coming to the point. "It's about Ursula," he said at last. "About your letter, as a matter of fact. I didn't know what to do about it. Suppose you'd moved on and it came back to me."

"That's all right," said Chris sourly. "There wasn't anything to be done for her anyhow, poor girl."

There was a silence. Each man measured the other.

"About the boy? He's all right?"

"He's all right, but no thanks to you, Ames. He's got a good home. The people have adopted him."

"It would play havoc with Beverly of course, even apart from Doctor. And her father, too. He's not too scrupulous about anything else, but a thing like that—"

"I've kept it to myself for a year and more. It's a matter of indifference," said Chris dryly. "If that's all, Ames—"

"That's all. He got up. "Do these people need money? I suppose that's up to me."

"They need nothing. It's not up to you. The boy has been legally adopted. He's no longer yours."

"Well, that's something," said Jerry, and brightened. "I'm not a complete and utter skunk, you know. I want him cared for. If anything happens to me—"

"He's cared for all right. What's going to happen to you?"

"Nothing," Jerry said bitterly. "I wish to God it would, a fellow can die here or dry rot. I wanted to go to Europe in some capacity or other, but I've got a wife and the old man simply called me a muddling fool."

Chris was increasingly busy that winter. Grant was not well. He was going about, but he was thin and irritable. The hospital, watching him with a hundred pairs of eagle eyes, saw that he was slipping. One day there was an accident in the operating room. Fortunately no death resulted it shook him badly. He gave up his evening calls, handing them to Chris; but the long hours alone with Janet got on his nerves. He would go down to his handsome offices and sit there alone at the desk, relieved at his work, going over old case records.

He would wait until Janet was asleep before he went upstairs, going slowly, holding to the rail, stopping now and then for breath. He saved his breath, drawing it in carefully letting it out slowly. Air was precious. He need not seemed to get enough air.

"Worn out," he thought. "Worn out with the job. Too much work and not enough sleep for years on end. I'll catch up on sleep and then I'll be all right." But he knew better.

Chris knew it, too, and one evening he got a frantic call from Janet Grant. Grant had collapsed on the stairs and was unconscious. When Chris got there, he was dead. They had carried him up and laid him in his handsome bed and he was still there, his face quiet, his long hands lying idle on the silk spread.

"We can't be gods. We're only men," Chris thought, and said nothing that.

Grant's death still further disrupted the hospital, already suffering from the loss of some of the younger men. They would soon be grinning to Burnett and say they were going over to get into the Big Push. Then in a day or two they would be gone, to England, to France, driving their ambulances, hunting trouble, but still happy-go-lucky and reckless.

But it was still a war on paper to America, a matter of maps and maybe plans to mark this fine and that. One night at the medical society some one read a paper on the possible effects of the war on surgery, but it was purely academic. No one knew. Chris would sit with detached interest. Inwardly his heart was in the fight. His reputation was growing, not spectacularly but steadily.

At home Katie had joined the Red Cross, was busy learning to make bandages. She was going to go, and because the most important women in the city were already doing it.

One day she met Beverly at a luncheon, and Beverly, rather sorry for her among that group, asked her to dinner.

"Very informal," she said. "Just you and your husband and our-selves. Doctor Burnett's busy, tell him not to dress."

Katie went home walking on air, planning what to wear, and telling Chris with suppressed excitement. Chris, however, was tired. He received the news indifferently.

"I don't dine out, and you know it, Katie."

"If you don't do this, I'll never forgive you."

"I'll try, but if anything comes up, you'll have to go alone."

But he was comfortable about it, however. He did not want to go to the Lewis house as a guest, taking a wife with him. It held too many memories, too much pain. Then at noon of the appointed day Chris, still holding to his general work, had an urgent obstetric case, and Katie burst into tears.

"I'll probably get back in time," he said. "If I don't, go on and I'll come when I can."

But he knew it was a step without you Chris. Do you think it's easy for me to go there, anywhere?"

Don't Keep on Having Constipation!

If constipation's got you down—so you feel heavy, tired and dopey—it's time you did something about it. And something more than taking a physic that doesn't get at the cause of the trouble.

If you've had the things most people do, the chances are that a sorry simple fact causes your constipation—you don't get enough "bulk" in your diet. "Bulk" doesn't mean heavy food. It means a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but passes on through the intestines and helps a bowel movement.

If that is your trouble, eat crisp crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran every breakfast, every day and drink plenty of water. All-Bran is made of the Staunton Lewis case, however, she grew thoughtful and slightly hostile.

"I suppose you've been seeing her day after day."

"If you mean, Mrs. Ames, I've seen her, naturally. She's been in trouble."

"In great trouble about her father! Don't make me laugh, Chris. What does she care, or anybody else for that matter?"

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper pop was looking at the comic page with no expression, saying to me, "Yes gods what's become of this country's sense of humor since I stopped being a young man, I mean since I stopped being quite as young as I used to be? All you see on the comic pages nowadays is people getting trapped in a cave and roped and baffled and tied han an foot in deserted cabins and pushed out of airplanes. Where are the good old comic characters such as Dusty the Tramp and Silly Sidney who could have a whole wagon load of bricks fall on them, only to have them talk and harly except for a few bumps and several strips of magically applied sticking plaster? Those old boys could take it, he said.

Well if you ask me I'm glad they've taken it away—Ricky said, ma said, How can you sit there in your rite mind and compare a fascinating serial like Kinkaid Kennedy to a lot of old horseplay rubbidge with people constantly getting knocked on the head with long boards and tripped up by ropes and bitten by bulldogs till it was a wonder there was a seat of pants left in the Sunday papers, said, and pop said. But they always survived safe and sound till the next Sunday. Those were the real days of miracles. And their silence was impressive langage, the essence of Anglo Saxon strength and bluntness. They only had a vocabulary of about half a dozen words, but they could express volumes, pop said.

I dont recall any such marvellous vocabulary, ma said, and pop said,

A Girl Like That

By JANE OSBORN

"You're really very fortunate," Viola Titus told Tom Hicks as his uncle's chauffeur drove them from the suburban railroad station to the uncle's country place. "So many young men want to follow some profession but have to give up for lack of funds, while you have everything. Really your uncle is very generous to you. You are his only heir, aren't you?"

Tom Hicks watched the lips of the girl beside him, such pretty, decided, well-formed little lips.

"Yes," he said. "But that doesn't mean, of course, that I shall get everything. I don't like to think of it that way no one does. It's quite fit for an old man anyway. Doubtless he will outlive me." Tom sighed deeply.

"Why Tommy," said the charming Viola, "You're very handsome—and—and you're quite well I hope."

"Do you really care?" asked Tom, wishing that the chauffeur were further away. "Are you just saying that to be polite?" In answer Viola gave Tom's hand a quick, shy little pressure with her neatly gloved fingers.

Then they rode on in silence for a while and Tom's reflections were gloomy. Since boyhood he had been an orphan dependent on his uncle, repulsed to be more than a millionaire. Since boyhood he had been aware of the fact that his uncle's fortune would be entirely his own in the event that his conduct pleased the uncle.

Then he decided to study medicine. The uncle was a lavish provider of many ways but anything like a regular supply of ready money was never part of his bounty. Moreover, he had made it perfectly clear that he would be displeased if Tom applied for any scholarships or made an effort to earn money in any way. It would be depriving some young man who really needed it the uncle said.

Then he had met Viola and from the first he was perfectly sure that he would either marry Viola or remain a bachelor. And with Viola money certainly counted. Viola was not to blame. It had been part of her education. Tom had persuaded himself that Viola really cared for him for himself alone, she had already told him that she did, but he also felt that to attempt to make Viola happy on the income of the struggling young physician would be entirely out of the question. It would be necessary to count on help from the uncle even after having acquired the much-desired medical degree.

Now he was bound with Viola for Dayton, where he had spent the four undergraduate years. He had stopped at his uncle's with Viola and when Viola was not observing he had asked the older man for "a few dollars." His uncle had given him a twenty-dollar bill, commenting that he didn't suppose he would need it all, and that he was sorry he had no change. Tom felt that twenty dollars would just about cover expenses.

First they parked their car on an open field guarded by a native who expected a dollar from every motorist who left his car there. Tom proffered his twenty dollars, but the native had no change. Neither had the chauffeur. He passed boys on the street selling roses, the emblem of Dayton colors. He stopped to buy some for Viola, but the peddler had no change, so Viola had to go without. After the scene there was in the smartest inn in town, where they met old friends, who sat with them. For lack of change Tom let the others do the tipping, and signed the tea slip "On account—Thos. Hicks, Sr."

So Tom chatted with his twenty dollars intact. His uncle had suggested that he bring Viola back to an eight o'clock supper at the house. There was an elderly neighbor for the sake of respectability and the supper was as dull as it was perfectly served and richly appointed. At ten o'clock Tom and the chauffeur escorted Viola home.

He returned at eleven to find his uncle reading in his library. "You'll need some money, I suppose," said the uncle.

"I have twenty dollars you gave me this afternoon," said Tom, and had no chance to explain.

"I like a girl like that," said the uncle. "Wouldn't let you spend a cent. Well, I thought she seemed like a fine young woman. If she had been like the young flappers you hear about you wouldn't have had a dollar left. Get her to marry you when you finish medical college and I'll give you a hundred thousand dollars as a starter. I like a girl like that."

Swinging along is the frock of skimpy fringe, nice for war now and for later in next season. A nice model is of black silk sheer, the skirt formed of two tiers of black silk fringe. Moulded bodice and short sleeves are other details.

United States President Declares U.S. Friendship For Neighbor To North

True Friends Refuse to Accept Twists of Secret Diplomacy

CROSSING FRONTIER

United States Press Sees Extension of Monroe Doctrine to Canada

By WILLIAM ARDERY

Associated Press Staff Writer

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 18.—(AP)—President Roosevelt asserted emphatically today the people of the United States "will not stand idly by" if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other empire."

The chief executive, speaking at Queen's University, expressed sincere friendship for Canada as a member in "the fellowship of free Americas." He added:

"We in the Americas are no longer a far away continent, to which the eddies of controversies beyond the seas could spring no interest or no harm.

"What we in the Americas have become a consideration to every propaganda office and to every general staff beyond the seas.

Canada is Sisterhood of Empire

"The dominion of Canada is part of the sisterhood of the British Empire, I give to you assurance that the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other Empire."

"The President, speaking only two days after Secretary Hull's call for a seven-point program to bring about world peace, used no vigorous terms about "wanton brutality" and "undemocratic regimentation" by a government. He did not, however, name any foreign nation.

Instead Mr. Roosevelt's address ran the theme that civilization and education transcend international borders, and that the Americas now are largely responsible for maintaining the tradition of a free interchange of ideas between nations.

The reaction of the President's talk was his acceptance of an honorary degree from Queens University.

"True Friends"

Referring to the United States and Canada, the President said that as good neighbors the nations are "true friends, because we maintain our own rights with frankness, because we scorn secret pacts, the twists or secret diplomacy, because we settle our disputes by consultation, because the home here, in common problems in the spirit of the common good.

Then, discussing the workings of public opinion, the chief executive had this to say:

"We can not prevent our people from having an opinion and giving it to wanton brutality, in regard to undemocratic regimentation or in regard to misery inflicted on helpless peoples, or in regard to violations of accepted individual rights."

Honorary Degree

In the George Taylor Richardson Stadium before a great throng of Canadian and United States citizens, President Roosevelt for the first visit to Ontario was presented by President Wallace of Queen University for the honorary degree, Doctor of Laws, which was conferred by Chancellor A. Richardson.

Referring by special train from Niagara Falls where he entered Canada during the night President Roosevelt was met by distinguished Canadian citizens headed by Hon. Mr. Lapointe, Dominion minister of Justice, Prime Minister Mackenzie King, and Premier Hepburn of Ontario. Prime Minister

'Desire to Use Moral Face of U.S. For Peace' Seen

Paris, Aug. 18 — (AP)—President Roosevelt's address in accepting an honorary degree at Queen's University, Kingston, Ont., today was widely interpreted here as a step by the United States toward active support of Great Britain and France in world affairs.

French officials expressed "great pleasure" at the President's speech, calling it as proof that the "democracies of the world are standing together".

London, Aug. 18—(AP)— President Roosevelt's speech today at Kingston, Ont., was received in authoritative quarters in Great Britain as "further evidence of the President's sincere desire to use the moral force of the United States for peace."

Persons close to the foreign office welcomed the President's assurance that "the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by an other Empire."

PRESIDENT'S TRAIN STOPS 5 MINUTES AT BELLEVILLE

Blinds on Coach Occupied by Mr. Roosevelt, Tightly Drawn

TRAIN WELL GUARDED

Flying the two white flags of a "passenger extra" on a giant streamlined locomotive, burnished and polished in its black and gold to a mirror-like finish, the President Roosevelt special train thundered over the Canadian National Railways' tracks past the awaiting throngs of citizens at the north station and along the right-of-way, and slowed to a before stop at the water tower near the coal chutes at the eastern yard limits at 8:40 o'clock, city time, this morning.

The special had completed the run in charge of engineer Wm. V. Fairbairn of 325 Charles Street, with fireman Jos. Jones of 112 East Moira Street, fireman, both C.N.R. veterans of lengthy service, from Toronto, and Conductor Bourgeois, where it had been stopped on order of Alex. McSaunders, car mechanic of the local division, who also accompanied the train from Toronto. The stop was was necessary to repair a loose safety chain.

Residents Disappointed

Residents, who awaited the arrival of the train in hopes of welcoming the president were disappointed. During the five minutes stop necessary for water, the shades of the special coach, Manoa Pole, one of the seven mired Pennsylvania Railroad cars on the end of the train drawn, the portieres were shut and make his appearance, apparently resting late evening to the strenuous day ahead of opening the Thousand Islands International Bridge, and the accordion of a guard at the Queen's University, Kingston, earlier in the day.

SPLASH OF MILK REPELS MAD BULL

Chicago, Ont., Aug. 18 (CP) —Perhaps the familiar song "Beware of the bull" won't ward off picnickers and berry-pickers so effectively after they bring a pail of milk along with the lunch basket for here's a recipe that one Mrs. Black uses on a homebee.

Samuel Gagne was attacked by an infuriated animal while milking his cows yesterday and suffered slight abdominal injuries and lacerations before his sister-in-law dashed a bucket of milk over the bull's face, deferring H long enough for Gagne to roll under a fence to safety.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

Lightning! "As quick as lightning" is a common way of saying that the speed referred to is the greatest ever. But the speed of light is faster than lightning. It is in fact, the fastest speed we know of. Lightning travels at about one-sixth or one-tenth as fast as light. Camera science seems to show that lightning travels from cloud to earth by a series of steps. When the charge reaches the earth, an intense illumination builds up from the whole path. This luminous streak may last as much as a tenth of a second, which is a long time in matters concerning electricity.

KONRAD HENLEIN MEETS RUNCIMAN FOR MEDIATION

British Official Makes Little Progress in Negotiations

DEMAND AUTONOMY

Sudeten Statement Criticizes Czechoslovak Newspapers

Praha, Czechoslovakia, Aug. 18—(AP)—A Foreign Office official disclosed today that a meeting had been arranged between Viscount Runciman, unofficial British mediator in the troublesome Czechoslovakia minority question, and Konrad Henlein, leader of the anti-Germany-seeking Sudeten German minority.

It will be the first direct contact between Henlein and the British statesman. It was understood Lord Runciman would plead that the Sudeten Germans take a less uncompromising attitude in negotiations with the Czechoslovak government over demands for autonomy.

It was revealed the matter of prestige featured dealings to bring about the conference, which would be a sequel to the manifesto the Sudetens issued yesterday expressing dissatisfaction with present procedures which "lead nowhere."

Attitude Examined

Henlein took the attitude that as leader of the Sudetens he should not make the first call because the of Lord Runciman's first acts here was to make no courtesy call on President Benes.

Britons engineered a compromise whereby the meeting was scheduled for "neutral territory" at the Rothkaj Castle of Prince Von Rohenlohe.

The Sudeten Germans, pro-Nazi and the most energetic of the minority groups, demand autonomy in government of their own group of 2,500,000 and have a sympathetic ear in Germany.

Doubting the "good will" often publicly voiced by the Czechoslovak government, the Sudeten statement also criticized Czechoslovak newspapers which "certainly lack this good will."

Makes Little Progress

Diplomatic quarters felt the stand of the Sudetens plainly indicated that Viscount Runciman sent here by Prime Minister Chamberlain had not yet brought closer together the Henlein-backed Sudetens and the Czechoslovak government.

As in past pronouncements, the Sudeten party leaders expressed readiness to continue negotiations but now, "through the logical construction of the state, the minorities problem and therewith the crisis of state could be solved on the basis of Konrad Henlein's eight-point Karlov Vary program."

Extra Equipment In Hope Of Finding Body

Toronto, Aug. 18—(CP)— Seaman Jack Cooper of the Toronto Life-Saving Department boarded a big amphibian plan piloted by Pat Douglas today and left for Little Current, Ont., to assist in dragging operations for the body of Daniel C. Dodge.

Douglas had left from Little Current earlier in the day to pick up dragging equipment and to bring an experienced dragger to aid Manitoulin Island fishermen in their hunt for the body of the young millionaire. The Osa's Ark, the Douglas plane piloting belonged to Dodge.

Monkeys Definitely The Losers When Cornered by Foreman in Hen House

Montreal, Aug. 18—(CP)— In grim battle, Park foreman Joe Tessier picked feathers off his person today, but finally clipped on the what happened between him and the monkeys in the henhouse.

The monkeys, what went on in Daniel Plouffe's hennery may never be known. Tessier wasn't talking after he and two dejected monkeys and a lot of molasses-soaked feathers came out of the henhouse together last night in a sticky struggle.

The monkeys were definitely the had been at liberty, part of a group of 14 which escaped from Belmont Amusement Park Zoo. Until last night they had just annoyed at bails of dragged nuts and cans of molasses.

But somehow spotted them going into the henhouse. The foreman crawled in after them and shut the door behind him. When he came out the monkeys were in custody, there was an overpowering smell of rum in the Plouffe orchard and feathers everywhere.

Three of the monkeys remained

International Bridge Opened at Ivy Lea

Thirty-five million people in the 300 miles of the span today dedicated by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister King. This was the setting where the President of the United States declared the people of the Republic would not stand idly by "if domination of Canada is threatened by another Empire".

Five Spans Make Up Bridge System Extends 8 1-2 Miles

Ivy Lea, Ont., Aug. 17—(CP)—Five distinct spans make up the international bridge opened today by President Franklin Roosevelt and Prime Minister Mackenzie King in this Thousand Islands district. The system is eight and one-half miles long and cost about $3,000,000.

Bridge officials expect a revenue of about $250,000 a year and the Canadian section of the bridge reverts to the Ontario government when tolls have paid for it. Representations are being made to both the Canadian and United States governments to have the bridge right-of-way converted into international parks.

Two fairly large islands, Wells and Hill Islands, are integral parts of the bridge. Canadian immigration and administrative offices will be on Hill Island and similar United States offices on Wells Island.

Bridge Approach 4500 Feet

The largest bridge in the system spans the American channel and connects the United States mainland to Wells Island. This 800-foot steel arch suspension bridge provides a 150-foot clearance for river boats. The steel and concrete approach to this bridge from the mainland is 4,500 feet long.

The next bridge, at the end of a four and one-half mile road across Wells Island, is a 90-foot concrete span linking Wells and Hill Island. A brass strip on the roadway and bronze tablets on the railings of this structure, called "The Biggest Little Bridge in the World," mark the international boundary. Faced with native granite, the bridge is built of the material from which it springs.

The bridge connecting the two Canadian islands, Hill and Constance Islands, is a 600-foot span with a center pier on Benson's Island, a small rock island midway between Hill and Constance.

Constance and Georgina Islands, both Dominion national parks, are joined by a 346-foot steel arch bridge. It spans the famous Lost Channel of the Thousand Islands.

Preserve Priceless Heritage Of Free Ways of Life and Our Neighborly Relations

—Prime Minister King.

Ivy Lea, Ont., Aug. 18 (CP)— Its politics as well as in road-building Canada and the United States have learned and practised the art of bridge building, Prime Minister Mackenzie King said here today as he joined with President Roosevelt in the dedication of the Thousand Islands International bridge.

"The peoples of this continent, whether concerned with steel arches or with the invisible realities of the mind and spirit, have, for the most part been bridge-builders worthy of the name," he said. "In politics as in road-building it is a great thing, Mr. President, to know how to build bridges.

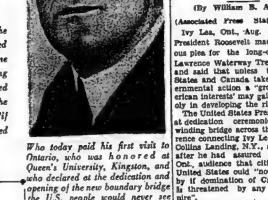
International Bridge Symbol

"In the art of International bridge building there are two structures, each with its association with the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes, of which I should like to say just a word. They stand out as monuments to international co-operation and good-will. Each has its message for the world of today. The one is the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817 and the other the International Joint Commission, created in 1900." He went on to say:

Challenges to Order Are Many

"It will be at once apparent that the challenges to an international order, founded upon the rule of law, are many and dangerous. No one who looks at the distracted and disordered state of the world today can fail to be impressed by the extent to which the forces of international anarchy are seeking to prevail and to subvert those standards of human conduct which we have come to regard as essential attributes of our civilization.

"The task of the bridge-builder remains. I think I speak for the great majority when I say that, not only are we determined to preserve the neighborly relations and the free ways of life which are our priceless heritage but that we earnestly desire to see them become a part of the common heritage of mankind. To that end we are prepared to go on building bridges, to throw the span of friendship and freedom across the troubled waters of our time."



The Prime Minister greeted President Roosevelt as personal friend of many years and said his own efforts in the sphere of International

SERIOUS PROBLEM

Considers it Part of Good Neighbor to Discus Question Frankly

(By William B. Ardery)

(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Ivy Lea, Ont., Aug. 18—(AP)— President Roosevelt made a vigorous plea for the long-debated St. Lawrence waterway project today and said that unless the United States and Canada take joint government action a "group of American interests" may gain a monopoly in developing the river.

The United States President spoke at dedication ceremonies for the soaring bridge across the St. Lawrence connecting Ivy Lea, Ont., and Collins Landing, N.Y., a few hours after he had assured a Kingston, Ont., audience that citizens of the United States would not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other empire".

The president in his prepared address here outlined the potentialities of navigation and power development in the boundary-line river and then added:

A Major Problem

"The development of natural resources and the proper handling of their fruits is a major problem of Government. Naturally, no solution would be satisfactory to either country which did not have its government entirely master in its own house.

"To put it bluntly, a group of American interests is here gradually putting itself into a position where, unless caution is exercised they may in time be able to determine the economic fate of a large area, both in Canada and the United States."

The President said he looked forward to the day when a Canadian Prime Minister and an American President may meet in dedication a bridge across this water—but

Feels She Should Stay With Babes, Mother's Intuition Saves 3 Lives

Vancouver, Aug. 18.—(CP)— A mother's intuition, Mrs. Hyman Dempsey believed today, kept her in her Mount Pleasant District home and saved the lives of her three children, all under six, small children from the scheming callousness of a fiend.

Mrs. Dashevsky had considered entering the theatre for the matinee Tuesday but refused she "felt I should stay with my babies."

Early yesterday a gasoline-filled bomb was hurled through the rear potch of the Dashevsky home was ignited, apparently by a fire-bug. The children wakened to choking, smoke and flames, roused the family and helped them to safety although front and rear doors had been wired shut from the outside.

Unable to rouse Mr. Dashevsky at first, the mother picked up the two-year-old Harry and rushed to the back door which she found fastened and fireproof. Then she returned, found her husband awake and they left by the front door only to find it fastened.

A window was the only way out and the three-year-old Nellie were carried out a window in the front room. Fire-fighters found the flames under control after considerable damage was done.

John A. Thomas, British Columbia fire warden, said the case would be solved "if it takes us five years". He said the doors had been wired with wire wrenched from the doorknobs to heavy bolts inserted

MAYOR APPEALS TO ATTY. GENERAL

Disapproves of The Dumping of Garbage Into Bay of Quinte

Whether contamination of the waters of the Bay of Quinte by the transient summer campers, allegedly some causing factories and others who by this means escape disposing of garbage and rubbish by dumping it into the bay is an offence under the provincial or federal statutes, Mayor Jamieson Jones has announced his intention of appealing to the Attorney-General in an effort to stop this practice.

The appeal is made by the Mayor on behalf of other permanent summer home owners, among which he is numbered, who say that the practice of contaminating this summer regarding the matter. An owner of a summer camp on the north shore or the bay some distance west of the city, Mayor Jones declared the condition to be a disgraceful one.

"Our beach, as well as many other beaches on the north shore has been littered with disagreeable garbage all kinds during the summer which has apparently been washed up from the Prince Edward side. Included in this rubbish are scores of cans containing refuse which has apparently spoiled at some canning plant across the bay and has been dumped into the bay. The cans have been swelled by the decomposition of the food inside, and float easily.

"Summer campers have also been in the habit of taking their garbage out on the bay after dark and dumping it there to float around for days on the tide. We are going to see what the law is regarding this and are going to enforce it to the limit before some disease epidemic sets in," warned the Mayor.

"An inexpensive incinerator would end all this trouble."

Committee Recommends Paving Agreements Be Terminated

Verbal and written agreements made between reeves of four Hastings County townships, and county officials eighteen years ago with regard to payment of paying within their townships, of the gravel roads terminate at the end of the year, if a recommendation of the county members of the Roads and Bridges Committee at a special meeting held yesterday morning is carried.

The motion passed by members in session yesterday stated that "A recommendation be made at the Hastings County Council at its December session that agreements in force regarding paving with the villages of Tweed, Frankford, Stirling and Madoc, be terminated at the end of 1938, when no further payments will be required regarding said paving."

The special session held yesterday was at the call of Warden Hubbard and action held in the June session when reeves of the villages involved declaimed that full payment of loan received from the county with regard to the paving of village streets that the county be covered a fifty per cent subsidy from the government of money paid out for this purpose.

Validity of agreements was questioned at the June session when

NO DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN PREMIER, VISCOUNT HALIFAX

Reports Described as "Preposterous And Mischievous"

DENIAL EMPHATIC

By J. F. SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 18—(CP)—Chain Reports of disagreement between Prime Minister Chamberlain and Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax over Great Britain's foreign policy is ridiculed in authoritative circles today as "preposterous and mischievous at this time."

There was no indication in Whitehall or Lay major conflict between the two government leaders. nor any promise that Great Britain would not consider incident compatible to the resignation last February of Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden.

Reports circulated here last night that Lord Halifax had decided a firmer stand was necessary against Chancellor Hitler of Germany were believed to have originated in the Czechoslovak colony of London.

They were dismissed as "wishful thinking". It Britain's attitude of firmer measures against Germany it would strengthen the Czech government in its fight for independence by its Sudeten German minority.

"There is no disagreement in fact tify the report," said a foreign office official and others were equally emphatic in denials.

Meanwhile inaugurant General Franco's reply to the British demand for withdrawing of foreign volunteers from both sides in the Spanish civil war may not be published for several days.

It was learned Tuesday to Sir Robert Hodgson, British agent to the insurgent administration at Burgos, but has not arrived in London. It will be necessary to decipher and translate it. Both the London have heard unofficial reports that the reply be hedged in conditions or to represent a practical "no" to the proposals, which the Spanish government have accepted.

the very water itself, to the lasting and productive use of their respective peoples."

At Great Gateway

Mr. Roosevelt called attention to the fact that at present there is a 14-foot channel carrying water traffic from the Great Lakes through the St. Lawrence river to the Atlantic. He continued—

"If this were completed, which can easily be done to 27 or 30 feet, every city on the Great Lakes now inland, would become an ocean port.

"The bank sof the St. Lawrence Valley would become one of the greatest gateways of the world and would benefit accordingly.

"Do we need to delay and to deprive our peoples of the immediate employment and the permanent our generation from reaping the harvest, which is awaiting us?

Seaway Essential

The President told his listeners that if they would "look at events "with which my government is familiar" they would learn that all nations power consider the simile the St. Lawrence except the Ontario Hydro are "allied to it" not controlled by a "great American group."

This control, he said, embraces "the usual surrounding penumbra of Allies, affiliates, subsidiaries and satellites".

"In earlier stages of development of makural resources on this continent," Mr. Roosevelt continued, "this was normal and usual."

"In recent decades however, we have come to realize the implications for the future welfare the individual men and women, to business men, big and little, and even to government itself — arising from the ownership by any group of the right to dispose of wealth which was created to us collectively by a nature herself.

"Now it is axiomatic in Canadian-American relations that both of us should refrain from doing to each to determine its own affairs. For that reason, when I know that the people of concentrated American economic forces is slowly producing a result which affects the side of the border, which I know very well must eventually give American people a great interest over Canadian development, I consider it the part of a good neighbor to discuss the question frankly.

Difficult Problem

It is obvious that such some economic problems are international, only because of the geography in which the solutions have on the lives of the people outside, as well as inside any one country. The problem of the development of St. Lawrence navigation and power is such a problem."

Mr. Roosevelt took occasion during his talk to emphasize emphasize that development of the St. Lawrence waterway would hurt the railroads.

"We know now that the effect of such a project is not to take traffic away from railroad lines," he said. "Actually, it creates new possibilities

Defeats Another Belleville Boy, Barney Wright, For Title

Crouching low in his speeding car, Ernest Young, fourteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Young, 383½ Front Street, Belleville, flashed across the finish line a few feet ahead of Barney Wright, 13, another Belleville youngster, to win the Grand Championship in the finals of the Soap-Box Derby held in Toronto yesterday under the auspices of the Danforth Business Men's Association.

Young sped down the long Logan Avenue course at a speed estimated from 30 to 35 miles per hour, to nose out his fellow townsman in a close, thrilling race. Again the large crowd, who had taken the w ing drivers to their hearts gave a thrilling reception.

Officials of the club announced today that further appreciation of the honors won by Young and Wright in bringing the coveted title to this city will be shown in the near future. # Young Canada Club Stage Successful Garden Party; Leopold Macaulay Speaker

Dr. H. E. Welsh Member E. Hastings And Other District Members Present

H. ROLLINS, CHAIRMAN

Tweed Band And Other Artists Provide Fine Entertainment

The first objective of the Conservative Government in the Province of Ontario when it is returned to power at the next provincial election will be to find work for those who are now asking for a living.

This was the pledge and the promise given last evening before an audience of hundreds on the farm of S. W. Grills, Second Concession of Thurlow Township by the Hon. Leopold Macaulay, K.C., former Minister of Highways for Ontario during the Henry Government, latterly house leader, and candidate for the Conservative leadership of Ontario.

"We have that duty, to find work for those willing and anxious to do it. Mitchell F. Hepburn, as well as his henchman Mackenzie King at Ottawa, has failed in all his pre-election promises in this regard, as well as many others. No country can have twenty per cent of its population on the relief rolls and still continue to carry on. Unless we take steps immediately to cure this situation there is going to be trouble," warned the Hon. Mr. Macaulay in serious vein.

Province Has Everything

"Ontario, the banner province, has everything to make it prosperous, happy and gainfully employed. It is up to the people of Ontario to put in a government which will see that this intolerable situation is ended. The sooner the better," he added.

Arranged by members of the Thurlow Young Canada Club under its president, Miss Margaret Reynolds, the gathering which was not in the nature of a pure political meeting, was registered as one of the most successful in interest and attendance held in this district recently. Early in the session of a social gathering for Conservative supporters of the section, it attracted representative speakers of the Dominion and Provincial Governments from Toronto, Kingston and the ridings of the central district.

Introduced by Member

Introduced by Dr. H. E. Welsh, M.P.P. for East Hastings as "the boy who got his start in life at Lindsay, and his education at Lindsay, and his business in the City of Toronto," the Hon Mr. Macaulay was further described as the youngest member elected to the Upper House, when he was named from the riding of South York, a riding which he represented and in which he has lived on four separate occasions. In the year 1930, the Hon. Leopold Macaulay served as Provincial Secretary, then as Minister of Highways. Last year he was chosen as house leader of the Conservative party. His title "Leo, the Lion," pointed out Dr. Welsh, was one which was richly earned.

"He assumes the attitude now," informed Dr. Welsh, "that if you people of Province of Ontario want his as leader over the party, then he will be willing to accept that honor."

Paying tribute to the courage of members of the Young Canada Conservative Club membership in an organization, last evening's huge gathering in the face of the many seasonal difficulties now apparent, the speaker stated that the evening declared the event an unique one. "Even here, where conservatives sprout like potatoes in a hill".

Often Wonder

"We in Toronto often wonder where you electors down here get such high class representatives to send up there to continued the fight Mr. Macaulay, acknowledging the friendship of Dr. McSeaghan, R. D. Arnott, K.C., M.P.P. for West Hastings. "We don't know how to live up to them."

"It can't be done," interjected Wm. Duckworth, M.P.P. for Dovercourt, Toronto.

Mr. Macaulay noted the large attendance of women supporters in the audience, and paid tribute to their interest, and the increasing interest of women of all Ontario who have taken the matter of politics seriously during the past few years.

NOTED JUDGE DIES

Hon. Francis Robert Latchford, Chief Justice of Ontario, who died in Toronto. Aged 84, he has served as a judge of the high court for 30 years following a brilliant career as a lawyer. At one time he was minister of public works.

Women Have Place

"It has been felt in the past by the old shellbacks and diehards that women had no place in politics, but time has proved, and even conditions with it. Today the decisions of nations are swayed and shaped by women.

"Twenty years ago children were taught little Conservatives or little Liberals. They could be depended upon to vote in the manner of the rest of their voting days. Today the picture has changed, there is a new independence developed. And none needs more careful explanation of the issues of politics and platforms than the woman voter, herself," continued Mr. Macaulay. "And grandfather all they say sound, during this march of progress when the world and the times come more liberal-minded, the Province in Canada where women have had time to vote in which the Liberalism has ruled for the past fifty years—the Province of Quebec."

The former Minister of Highways in his brief reference to the matter of road working the Province at the present time turned his attention to the County of Prince Edward, recalling the work that was being carried on there just previous to the last election. Men were taken on there who were laid off before the election date. Then, even before they could start to work on the job, the day after the election who won, they were laid off the job. That was eleven o'clock in the morning of the next day when they were told the job was finished. They didn't need to read the papers to know that the Liberal party had gone back in.

Want Sincere Effort

"What this province is looking for today is a sincere effort on the part of her representatives in the something constructive. Hepburn staged a 'map' election in 1937 and since then the Hepburn Government has done nothing. As former Minister of Highways, I failed to present deeply against the habit this government has of starting work on roads of the Province just before an election, and then closing it down after the party gets in. It is a bad business, a serious business. We of the Conservative, party could never be charged with this. We did have work going before our people, but the work was laid out and can be carried on steadily long before."

Highway No. 37 which was described by the Hon. Mr. Macaulay in his graphic style as "really dangerous" was further stated to be one of the best advertisements for good roads that we can give you, "there is no maintenance on it, and the complete road is full of dangerous spots." It was declared.

Patronage in the matter of road work was further scored by the speaker, who charged that in many districts, men were hired whether they were Liberal supporters before any job could be given them. "We have complaints of this political patronage all through the Province. Men say they can't get work unless they are a member of the Liberal party at election campaign for it. It is a vicious practice which must be stopped. The coercion of constituencies before any public works spending is made there is another indictment against the party now in power," declared Mr. Macaulay with some fervor.

Condition Serious

"The condition of this country at present is a serious one. We are rapidly approaching a point where through spendthrift taxation which is excessive, borrowing, we are on the verge of bankruptcy or devaluation, or some form of inflation. Our expenditures are becoming more than we are able to pay. Mitchell Hepburn before his election, talked of duplication between the Dominion and the Province. He said he would end all that, when he got into office. He said further he would cut the cost of government fifty per cent. Instead he has increased it fifty per cent. The cost of administration at present, plus the cost of services, has increased seventy per cent. The Hepburn Government is the greatest spending machine this country has ever seen. And costs are steadily mounting," charged the speaker.

Electors Fooled Is Claim

"When King and Hepburn campaigned through the Province in 1935, they told electors it was a heaven-sent opportunity to amalgamate the Province and the Dominion into one integral unit, where unity would really be experienced. The electors were fooled. They voted them both in. They thought they were getting a united Liberal party. They got a united Liberal Dominion monopoly now, but we have more and more disunity all the country than we have had since the days of Confederation. Provincial rights are forgotten where they were fighting and have been combined fighting since. The state of state is drifting because Mr. King has no time to attend to the affairs. We're down in the hold wondering what strange port we are bound to drift into.

"A 'Liberal Government' was believed by the speaker to be "one of the little Conservatives as anyone to tell me a single thing the King Government has done in the matter of constructive nature in the past three years," stated the speaker.

"Mr. King set the price of wheat in the western provinces, but the farmer of Ontario didn't. I myself, He has been ignored, vehemently protest against this. Wheat delivered at the siding down in Saskatchewan 70 cents per bushel. In the west it is 80 cents. Why the difference?

Mr. King is the spoiled darling of boom times in this country, but he is going for a sad awakening," prophesied Mr. Macaulay.

"Particularly and Federally, we will have to begin ourselves to cope with conditions, which are becoming serious," warned the speaker. "Youth of today particularly must be given chance. There is something wrong with the management of a country, which refuses its youth the right to work and to live. It is an indictment of Canada, and we will pay dearly for this sad in later date unless something is done at once. We have that duty to find work for those who are able to do it. Hepburn has failed as he has failed in all his promises. It is up to the Conservative party now to take charge and cure this. Cost effective when we are returned to power at the same time it will be to remedy this situation at once."

Reminding that he was speaking next as a political opponent and friend, Mr. Macaulay promised that he would not "burn his bridges" as many other matters would be given by him. Mr. Macaulay was pleased to be back at "this scene of the Homeric battle of East Hastings, and again in the role of leader," as a man he was really proud of, Dr. H. E. Welsh.

Harry Rollins Chairman

Chairman of the evening, Mr. Harry Rollins, president of the local social organization Club expressed the hope earlier that his "pinch hitting" for Mr. Geo. White of Madoc would prove successful. Miss Margaret Reynolds, president of the Thurlow Young Club, was paid tribute for the excellent work performed by the club during the past year, topped by last evening's splendid arrangements.

Mr. Geo. Challis, M.P. Lennox-Prince Edward, As the first of the representative speakers, paid high Federal member present, following his introduction, referred briefly to the recent Speech from the throne in Parliament, which, he declared, was one of the most liberal and beneficial sittings that had ever been held. The Conservative party leader was stated by the speaker to be having more trouble among his supporters at present than any Prince Minister had ever had be-whether there is more unity or disunity among the provinces than there is now. "I leave it to you to say since confederation," insisted Mr. Tustin. "We could have prosperity in this country. The people of it were but given the leadership we need. But we have had, with a drifting government, which has no policy or no unity. There stands today only one party which is united, that of the old dependable progressive Conservative party, which the electors of the country will be given the power when the opportunity comes," stated Mr. Tustin.

T. E. Kidd M.P.P.

Mr. T. E. Kidd, M.P.P., Kingston, declared that Premier Hepburn, "still running true to form" had still further to his promises made so often previous to his election. He pointed out that one of his first acts after taking office would be the putting of unemployment insurance on the statutes of this Province. He has failed. Unemployment has become nothing but a racket and nothing is being done to help the situation," charged the speaker. In the matter of immigration, the King Government during the past nine years has brought into this country a half million new residents, mostly those from non-British countries. But though this "act of bribery" men for which the country was not prepared to accept, Canada has lost 100,000 of her own people to the United States, it was further charged.

James Hepburn

James De. C. Hepburn, M.P.P. for Prince Edward-Lennox in his introduction by Chairman Rollins, was given the suggestion that his name should be changed. Promptly he countered that if any change was to be made "the change would be in the status of Mitchell F. Hepburn, not myself."

"The follies of the present Ontario Government can best be seen by the smoker in the Ontario House," stated Mr. Hepburn. "The Province of Ontario is in dire distress and badly in need of a good government. Hepburn is obsessed with the idea of remaining in power through any manner in which he can retain this position. But it is all at the expense of the Province he is supposed to represent." declared Mr. Prince Edward-Lennox, representative.

"I ask any one, particularly the younger people of the Province, what he has ever done to help them. We will have a heavy debt burden, see that our people get this consideration, which is their just due. If we don't, we will drift—drift to radical ideas and "isms". The younger generation must be given a chance. That is something which the present Governments is not doing."

Wm. Duckworth, Toronto

Wm. Duckworth of Dovercourt, Toronto, declared electors of East Hastings to be living up to their duty and loyal to their people. In his tribute to Dr. Welsh, Mr. Duckworth informed the audience that when they picked him as representative they picked "a man who looks after not only his own riding, but has the interests of the Province at heart, too."

"We Conservatives now have a new duty to perform, that of picking our leader, a task which should be a serious one to the people of Ontario. We don't want a Hepburn government in Ontario. We want a government of Ontario, one big enough to represent all the people of the Province. A man therefore in the Province, a man therefore is needed, who will legislate to the greatest good of the greatest majority."

R. D. Arnott

Mr. R. D. Arnott, K.C., M.P.P. for West Hastings, declared the need was not for political "burning speeches" but found time to wonder why, when East Hastings set such a record for Conservatism in the last of the Province was found so sadly lacking at the last election.

"We'll never get anywhere ripping Mr. Hepburn or his government up the back," he chided. "What we as Conservatives have to do is present a better program. This is my own thought. When we have a progressive Conservative platform, then it is our duty to bring it before the people and ask them to decide. We must choose our leader and then give him our support. We will go with the help of the press—not an independent press, but one which will carry the true ring of the platform."

Paying his own tribute to Dr. Harold Welsh, Mr. Arnott declared that at the last election and dividing line between East and West Hastings had been cut out. "We are now one, and I'd like to go on record as saying that I am in an extreme pleasure working with Dr. Welsh in the interests of our party."

Compliment Appreciated

To Dr. Welsh, to whom fell the honor of introducing the guest speaker of the evening, the laudatory comments extended by Chairman Rollins spoken to himself were accepted with due thanks. His own introduction by Chairman of the evening, Harry Rollins was countered with the statement that Mr. Rollins had been one of my pupils when I was just a country schoolmaster, and don't think I did a good job!" he asked his audience.

Appreciation for the splendid address given by the Hon. Leopold Macaulay was extended by Mrs. Roscoe Robson, Reeve of Thurlow, seconded by Mr. Wes. Grey, ex-Warden of Hastings County.

Following the addresses, refreshments were served by the ladies of the club and assistants. During the evening the Tweed Band rendered appropriate music, while an amplifying system of loud speakers carried every word distinctly to the farthest point in the large grounds. Among those who contributed to the program of the evening were: Miss Morrison, song; Miss Lane, tap dance; Harry and Lorne Carter, musical numbers; Mrs. Emsley, Point Anne, solo; Jos. Gow, solo (encore).

TIES GROW STRONGER

Today is a day that Ontario will not forget and that Canada and the United States will not forget. On this day the Chief Executive of the United States, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, made the first visit of any American president to Ontario, on his way to Kingston where he was honored with a degree from Queen's University and to Ivy Lea where this afternoon with Prime Minister Mackenzie King he dedicated and declared open the new Thousand Island Bridge between Canada and the United States. The trip through Ontario by the Presidential party was a memorable occasion for all cities and towns and villages along the Canadian National Railways line, including Belleville, for it marked the first occasion of a President in office being within their bounds.

This event in another age would have had great significance but today it bears significance of the greatest importance, both in its symbolism and in its practical demonstration of the interlocking interests of two nations side by side, who live in peace. A couple of days ago a writer remarked how the bristling fortresses and fortifications and soldiery which line the frontiers of the lands of Europe carry a very warlike look and then noted the peace which breathes upon two nations occupying the entire continent of North America to themselves.. The problems of the two peoples need not be one, but the deepest and ultimate aims are at heart the same—to live and let live in peaceful pursuit of their aims and hopes which acknowledge the rights of others.

Bridges not fortresses;

Lines of tourist traffic, not the endless line of march of tramping millions of soldiers armed to the teeth;

The dove of peace, not the howling dogs and the hovering vultures of war;

Two smiling countrysides, divided by great cleansing waters which signify pure ablution about the human shores of the eastern part of the North American Continent, the one to the south, the other to the north, rather than the smoking devastation of fields and barns and homes;

The clasp of the friend, not the threat of the bayonet thrust of the foe or the burst of deadly war implements;

The smoke of factories in the distance, not the battle clouds of war;

Cities and towns and hamlets inland on either side, not the soil stained with the rich crimson of human hearts in enemy armies;

The international visit of the air transport and plane for trade and tourist purposes, not enemy air raiders.

A west bound by one common bond of agricultural development, not a field of desolation through war.

These are some of the contrasts between neighbors at peace and neighbors at war or within threat of war.

In these days of the development of armaments, the democratic nations are outspoken on behalf of liberty as against repression.

It is no wonder therefore that Canadians and Americans look upon this day as of great value as a further demonstration of the ties that have been made between two friends. The new bridge becomes a highway of international friendship, for across it will pass thousands upon thousands to visit on either side of the border.

Today's ceremony is a sealing of the heart and hand of the two peoples in perpetuation of the kindred ideals which have marked their relations for a century and a quarter.

Mr. Roosevelt, no stranger to Eastern Canada, comes to this province as a guest whom Canada delights to welcome and honor as the representative of the greatest republic in the world and as an individual. She clothes him with the highest academic honors from Queen's University, and she takes him to her heart.

The welcome which Prime Minister King received at today's function at the opening of the bridge by the thousands who attended from Canada and the United States indicates how much the American people appreciate their northern neighbor, Canada.

A PART OF EXPERIENCE

It is not long since the radio was a novelty—today it is a fact of life which even a child of couple of years of age knows as part of the life he is living. Fifteen years ago an adult did not so appreciate it as the babe does today. That is all because it has come to stay and has started to fill every nook and cranny of human experience.

The airplane is just such another. Many because aviation has not intimately touched them. But the progress of leaps and bounds which this year has shown to man indicates how near the adult and the child of a few summers are to counting the airplane in its usual daily routine. A plane crosses the Atlantic in less than twenty hours. Never did the steamship so closely fit into the life of the people. Nor did the horse and buggy play a bigger part in relation to daily life that the car and truck do today.

CORRIGAN, THE AVIATOR, WHO FLEW TO IRELAND FROM NEW YORK in an antiquated aeroplane, is quoted as saying that "Liquor and flying do not mix." According to his uncle, Baptist clergyman, Corrigan neither drinks nor smokes, and is steady a lad as they make them even if he does go places he didn't start for. The fact that he started for California via Ireland just shows that he was happy about the whole thing and had a longer and wider vision than he was credited with. No matter where he started for then he is now going places, and California will only be a way station on his itinerary—while his present fleeting or otherwise popularity is the same thing is sure, if the facts stated in the beginning of this paragraph are facts and not press agent atmosphere, Corrigan will not be asked to recommend any brand of cigarettes, or whisky.

MCAREE, OF THE TORONTO GLOBE whose interesting column peps up the editorial page daily, takes one text and does the entire column on that. Recently the text was W. C. Field, the comedian, "Bill" for short. He mentioned Bill's flaming proboscis and his alleged capacity for whiskey, up to two bottles per day—and Bill's claim that despite his constant drinking he never was drunk, and his enemies slur that he never has been sober for more years than he can remember. Fields capitalizes upon everything his enemies say against him, even his capacity for liquor. He was awed by a doctor for twelve thousand dollars, the doctor claiming that he had weaned Bill off the bottle from two bottles a day to two ounces—in buttermilk. Bill contested the suit, lost it, but won a whole lot of newspaper publicity which he treasures more than much money. McAree only saw Fields once and that was in the character of Charles Dickens' Micawber, which was disappointing to one who had stored up memories of Micawber which even a Garrick would find hard to delineate.

DUMMY POLICEMAN, CORNER OF BRIDGE AND FRONT STREET, HAS BEEN DISCHARGED—for what reason your guess is as good as ours. When the dummy policeman was in position about two-thirds of the motorists were careful to go the entire distance and sedately round the marker. Now with only the base in position two-thirds of the motorists take a short cut, while two-thirds of the pedestrians are jumping for their lives before the fast moving automobiles. Previously one could assume safely that most of the cars would round the dummy, keeping a watchful eye on large trucks which, naturally, sought the shortest way. The corner cop may have been a dummy but no was certainly a useful one and the removal does not seem to make sense to those who have to make that crossing many times a day, find it hazardous at any time with right and left turns against the red light being permitted and little official supervision, while now it is doubly hazardous with fast drivers taking advantage of short cuts.

NEW GRANOLITHIS SIDEWALKS IN THE BUSINESS SECTION OF Belleville is another progressive move of the 1938 City Council—but gee, it's hard on business. The runways provided for shoppers are all right for the young and agile but the middle-aged refuse to trust themselves on them. Business men are of the opinion that this work could be done much better at night, when there is little or no traffic and no interference of any kind with the workers—besides being cooler and quieter. Better approaches could also be made to the stores. In the cities work on street car lines of a major nature is all done at night.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton M.D.

Shadows in the Mirror of Health

"The average person is not particularly interested in the fact that cancer may kill him, nor is he seriously concerned with heart disease. The average person does not think about his health, but he does think about the impression he will make, his social standing, his capabilities, his ability to beat a neighbour at a game, his chances of promotion and his appearance. And there are very few men and women, whatever they say, who, in their hearts would not like to meet their problems with a greater confidence, their occupation with more proficiency, their embarrassments with calmer self-assurance, their domestic life with more complacent certainty, and the world in general with the additional cheerfulness and vigor which accompany life a vivid actuality rather than a passage or existence".

I am quoting Dr. T. Wingate Todd, Cleveland, in Clinical Medicine and Surgery, because in this above simple manner, he points out the difference between a life that is certainly a great difference between simply being free of disease and enjoying buoyant health.

The trouble with the average person and his physician is that neither of them is interested in the other unless some real disease is present. Yet as Dr. Todd points out, disease today has changed. "It no longer plays ruthlessly in epidemics, but insidiously (secretly), cripples through hardens arteries, ruins teeth, warps and stunts development, shatters nerves and produces morbid moods and manners which destroy or cripple confidence and efficiency."

Tiredness, fear, and despondency are the symptoms of the early stages of disability.

The thought then for the physician is not to spend all his time and energy on those who are already diseased in mind and body (even though this may be) but to look more fully or completely into the cases of the average person who is restless, discontented, impatient, tired and depressed.

The thought for the average person is that life is more than routine and that it may be a physical reason (defects) that is causing the dreariness, restlessness, worry, and discontent that a physician or dentist could locate and remove.

LOST CHILD FOUND

Back in the arms of his father three-year-old Peter Mintone, of Toronto, seems none the worse for his more than 40 hours of wandering through wild bush country near Minden, Ont. A posse of 500 men and women sought the child who ran into the woods when frightened by horses. Except for a few scratches he was none the worse for his rambles in an area infested with bears. His father is Nossell Mintone.

EXPECT BUMPER TOBACCO CROP AS HARVEST STARTS

Tobacco growers in Canada are jubilant over what appears to be the best year for "My Lady Nicotine," for some time. Except in the Yamaska Valley of Quebec, bumper crops and exceptional prospects of commanding higher rates than in previous years, are cheering growers of the plant. The total acreage at approximately 84,000 acres as compared with 69,000 acres in 1937. Some $18,000,000 is expected to be the take this year for the crop in Ontario alone, although an accurate estimate cannot be made until the price for this year's crop is settled which may occur within the next few weeks. Here are some pictures of the Canadian industry. One shows a field of tobacco in bloom just ten WEEKS while at RIGHT, the plants are covered with bags to prevent cross pollination by bees and other insects. These bags are kept on until all danger of cross-pollination is past. Below, at RIGHT, tobacco grown in the Tillsonburg area is seen examining a sample leaf of the crop from the window of a drying barn. The tobacco is then tied in three sticks and hung to dry in barns until fully matured.

Proper Care In Time Prevents Weak Eyesight In Middle Age

Correct Glasses Aid to Vision After 40th Birthday

By LOGAN CLENDENNING, M. D.

UNDER THE slogan, "Sight Begins at Forty," the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness wages its campaign of education for better eye health.

Sight, of course, in many instances, begins to get dim at 40, but the society's purpose is to cheer up those who regard this as inevitable, and to spread the idea that if properly cared for, middle-aged eyes may be as efficient as they were in youth.

This is worthwhile, because so many people enter the period of middle life with a feeling of profound discouragement. They are accutely conscious that they can no longer do the things they once did, and tiredly say, "I'm getting old." And since their activities are cut down, they have to depend more on their eyes. Here they find that time has played them tricks, too. The eyes tire sooner than they did and the vision is not so automatically clear. There may be superimposed on the general discouragement the fear of going blind.

This is not justified, because with proper care the discomforts and chronic infections of the middle-aged eye can be mitigated and degenerative changes postponed indefinitely.

The almost inevitable change—"getting on" old sight—can be corrected with glasses, and while these are a nuisance, they are the only thing nothing. They are better than trying any of the new crop of substitutes for glasses. The "sight" lamps which come out each year are supposed to be as clear as crystal and as elastic as live rubber. He can see far and nearer without the nuisance, of course, he has an ocular defect. As we get past 40, the lens may lose its elasticity. It loses its clarity at a distance but the point recedes steadily. The lens is not accomodate but glasses will do it for us. Do not get glasses stronger than you need, as is frequently done by them too soon. It is better to leave some of the focusing of the eyes to themselves.

Cataract Explained

Cataract is the condition in which the lens does become less transparent. Opacity gradually forms. Sometimes the beginning of a cataract will be announced by the fact that the vision suddenly improves. Your aunt lays away her glasses and is very proud of her "second sight." This arouses suspicion in the mind of the good doctor. The cause is that in the very beginning of a cataract the lens is still transparent, but it swells and makes the eye near-sighted. Hence, the second sight.

Usually the opacity of cataract begins around the edge of the lens and causes no great disturbance of vision for years and years. The average period is 15 years between the time symptoms begin and a cataract is ripe enough for operation.

FAIRMAN—SHEFFIELD

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sheffield, Holloway, was the scene of one of the season's loveliest weddings at three-thirty yesterday afternoon, when their daughter, Vera Linda became the bride of Mr. Ronald Edwin Fairman, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Fairman of Hastings. Rev. Roy Rickard, Colborne, officiated.

The ceremony took place before a bank of flowering shrubs and ferns. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a charming floor length gown of Shiffley lace in crush rose tone, fashioned on long princess lines with yoke of georgette, and long sleeved jacket of lace. She carried a slight bouquet of crush rose tulle roll in shoulder length fall in graceful folds to form a halo.

The bride carried a shower bouquet of butterfly roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Audrey Sheffield was her sister's bridesmaid and wore a beautiful gown of periwinkle blue moussaline de soie with shoulder length jacket of the same material. She carried a bandeau of flowers in the shades of blue and mauve, and bridesmaid carried Brairelliff roses and pink larkspur.

Mr. Lorne Sheffield, niece of the bride, was flower girl and wore a dainty frock of cerise lace in picture drapery style, and bandeau of orchid flowers. She carried a colonial bouquet of pink and blue cornflowers and butterfly roses.

Mr. Earl Fairman, Cochrane, twin brother of the groom, was groomsman, and ushers were Mr. Ralph Sheffield, brother of the bride, and Mr. Gordon Fairman, Whitby, brother of the groom.

GOOD MANNERS

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

What Kind of Hostess Are You?

Having outlined in my column the other day the general qualifications that make a perfect hostess, let's talk in detail now about the duties of the guest whom you have invited to visit you.

The perfect hostess is ready before her guests arrive. Her plans are carefully made. She is "not hurried and unflurried", rested, at ease. She meets her guests at the station, or, if this is impossible, delegates this responsibility to some member of the family, and meets the guests at the door of her home. Her cordial greeting establishes at once the atmosphere, warm and friendly and well-being. She takes charge of the guests, (or if she cannot do so, the hand luggage and trunks (if any).

The arriving guest is taken at once to her room, that guest room so conscientiously and comfortably prepared by the hostess. If the guest room has no bath, the guest is shown the way to the family bathroom. The hostess leaves the guest to unpack, rest settled and refresh herself. The thoughtful hostess inquires if her guest would like to have tea or a glass of lemonade sent to her in her room, which she probably will if she has come a long way and wishes to take a shower and a nap before she dresses for dinner.

What is done next depends on the length of the guest's arrival. If it is planned and done during the entire visit depends on a thousand and one circumstances, the ideal hostess tries for the happy mean between being too-attentive and too casual. A second of a guest's time, and leaving a guest so much to her own devices that she wonders if she has been forgotten or if she is in the way. The first thing the hostess must do is to find out the interests and preferences of her guests. If breakfast means a tray in the bedroom, or breakfast downstairs? Then she must about swimming, tennis, golf? Does the guest wish to rest in the morning or be active? Does the guest wish to attend church on Sunday? The hostess radiates a sense of leisure . . . doesn't organize "activities" . . . the activities.

In her letter of invitation the hostess has somewhat outlined the general life of the household, and so the guest is, if she is told to be, ready for a tea, a luncheon or a her party, a dance at the club. Starting the week-end is the hostess and guest.

The hour of departure comes and the hostess remembers the courtesies of arranging about trains, luggage conveyances. She has engaged a taxi or book to read on the train. But there must, of course, be no evidence of eagerness to "speed the parting guest". A pleasant visit shared, and to be delightfully remembered.

Proper Order

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I would like to know if it is correct, in removing dishes from the table, to remove the meat platter, then the vegetable dishes, then the plates. Will you tell me about this?

Yes, this is the proper order. Here is a good rule to remember when removing dishes: Meat should be placed on the table, or passed in serving-dishes, or removed from the table in the order in which it appears in the course. Therefore, after the meat course, the meat platter is removed first, then the vegetable dishes, then other food accessories as the salad bowl, or tray of relish, the relish dish and, last, the plates.

Properly, before the dessert course, the table should be cleared of everything but the bread and butter plates, the salt and pepper sets, and all other accessories or dishes that will not be used in the dessert course, are removed on a tray.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

A Boy's Burden

Dear Miss Fairfax:

When my father died, he left a $5000 insurance policy to mother. We also had two small houses, which he insured for $35.00 a month. They were in a good neighborhood and now that we're back there, we rent for $35 apiece. There were some other assets, a couple of small mortgages and two Government bonds.

Mother's father was the type of man who never believed in talking business to women, so he left all the estate in the hands of mother and trusted to save some of the money for the family, and now that mother is gone, my step-mother and I have had the handling of anything but the small amount of insurance money, and she thought the money left her was enough.

She got some bum tips about stocks from her brother and I got a graduation present of a high school education and 17 years of age. Two weeks after graduation I got a job as office boy, which pays me $12.50 a week. I'm wild to go to college and study to be a lawyer and evening classes, and work day-times. But I realize that I can't get much first week's salary in getting a cool suit—a cotton suit—as I'm wearing my heavy woolen clothes I wore all winter.

I've decided to pay about $8 or $9 for the clothes and give a little present at about $2.00 to mother, and I expected to take my step-mother and myself to a movie and have a light lunch, evening dress is unnecessary, and I'm not asking for a present from her, but I've got to have a little money to buy liquor is pretty sad.

Do you have in view the ambition to go to college, and give you more opportunities in life, my advice to you is to start a bank account, give your mother her present, and save for your luncheon. Don't regard father's thirst as a sacred obligation; it isn't.

Sore

Your letter reveals one of the real tragedies of youth. Where parents are so desperately poor that every penny is required to feed growing children it's a case of "needs must". But that your father should take your first money to buy liquor is pretty sad.

Do you have in view the ambition to go to college, and give you more opportunities in life, my advice to you is to start a bank account, give your mother her present, and save for your luncheon. Don't regard father's thirst as a sacred obligation; It isn't.

Woes of 15-Year Old Girl

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Do you know what the feeling is, of being miserable at home? Home's sick for home place where you will be understood and be allowed to have a little fun, and not be the marked girl I am among my schoolmates?

EXERCISE IS VITAL

JANE BRYAN
Keeps fit by playing golf regularly

(By HELEN FOLLETT)

WOMEN SPEND their money for cosmetics, regard themselves critically in the mirror and fly hither and yon in pursuit of the magnolia-and-rose complexion, hair like shining silk, hands of lily whiteness. They seldom pause to realize that what they eat and how much they exercise have everything in the world to do with how they look.

Exercise has a beneficent physiological effect. It sends heat to the surface of the skin, helping the skin to send away waste fluids. It paints the cheeks with the oleander bloom, reddens the lips, puts sparkle in the eyes. It alleviates the lungs, improving the figure by bringing a full, normal chest measurement. It stimulates the functions of the internal organs and creates appetite, which means that the body will be properly nourished.

If horse gymnastics bore you, make it a habit to take a walk each day, or become enthusiastic about some outdoor sport. Swimming is the queen of exercises. Tennis makes the figure lithe and agile. Golf can't be sneered at; the swing of the club has a good effect upon the muscles of chest and arms.

When you walk, do you kick yourself, whacking the heel against the ankle? The remedy for this bad habit is to change the shoes you are wearing, get lighter ones with smaller heels.

If there is an ever-present wound on the ankle, as often happens, cover it with boric acid, apply a pad of gauze.

See that the waist of the foot has support or mould over the arch of a shoe you wear. If the foot is full and short, avoid the shoe that forces the flesh of the upper portion of the foot into a roll. There's nothing uglier than that.

The younger generation shows more sense in the selection of shoes than does the older generation, which still believes that a tiny foot is a priceless treasure. Then-age girls wear sevens even eights, sufferers for no humiliation.

What in years to come chiropodists will have to find other jobs or starve to death.

After a long shopping spree, bathe the feet in cold water to which baking soda has been added, which baking soda has been added, steam and then simmer for an hour longer.

Grapefruit ring is nice with cold meats. It needs two and one-half tablespoons gelatin, one-half cup cold water, one and one-half cups sugar, one and one-half cups grapefruit juice, one-half cup orange juice, one-quarter-cup lemon juice and one cup hot water. Soak gelatin in one-half cup cold water for five minutes. Boil sugar and hot water for three minutes or until dissolved. Let it cool and then add grapefruit, orange and lemon juice and a pinch of salt. Pour into ring. Set aside in cool place for several hours to harden. Avocado pear or grapefruit sections can be added if desired.

If the day is somewhat cool and you have the urge to bake a cake, then here's a good recipe to try. It needs one-quarter cup shortening, one cup sugar, one egg, three-eighths cup milk, two cups cake flour, two teaspoons baking powder, one-quarter teaspoon salt and one teaspoon lemon extract. Cream shortening and sugar. Beat egg; add. Combine milk and water. Add alternately with sifted dry ingredients. Add extract. Pour into greased pan eight by eight by two inches. Bake. Ice the topping, sprinkle batter with three tablespoons sugar, one-half teaspoon allspice, one teaspoon grated lemon ring and one-half cup broken walnut meats. Bake in moderate oven (350 F.) for 50 minutes.

Inspire Your Beauty With New Products and Iced Lotions

By JULIET SHELBY
Central Press Canadian Writer

THIS is the time when we begin to be bored with the long days and nights of heat and we're very thought of keeping up beauty routines is appalling. We are just trying to take it easy and let things look after themselves. Even the cool shower is an effort, and when we have refreshed ourselves in this way morning and evening, we feel it is about enough. Well, we should take it easy but not at the expense of our good looks, and no one can afford to look wilted when it takes so little to present a crisp fresh appearance.

One of the very best sources of inspiration is a new makeup. Just put away all the things you have been using and get a whole new outfit. Take your dressing table coolants and put them in a box for another time. Then keep all your new creams, lotions and fresheners in the refrigerator. There is something about cool things that changes your whole mental attitude about keeping up.

There are any number of good soaps, but for a change try lavender scent. It is one of those that is always refreshing in the bath. You must have a tepid tub bath, and when the perspiration is profuse, the skin needs special cleansing, and for this, we recommend a good bristle brush. You can get them with the lavender in a bowl, and that combination, with the lavender bath salts, or meal, will act as a real tonic. When you have finished the thorough scrub, turn on the cool shower and you are ready to wrap the big towel about you. Then finish with a quick sponging of the ice cold lavender cologne and a bit of dusting powder.

It is advisable to cream the face thoroughly after it has been scrubbed, so apply the cleansing cream first. Then remove and use one of this is removed, you will give your face and neck a regular facial with the tissue cream. It will soften and refine the texture, when all the dust and perspiration has been removed.

The final treatment is the iced toning. Have a bowl of ice and your in a tablespoonful of the toning astringent, then with the cotton pads keep up this application until there is a cool smoothness of the face and neck. When you are going to supply makeup, put on some more of the milky liquid. After it is blended well, it will make a perfect powder base. Paste does is always nice with this thorough treatment, and then the powder, lipstick and eye makeup.

Do this two or three times a week and you will look cool and refreshed no matter what the temperature may be.

TODAY'S GARDEN-GRAPH

Written by DEAN HALLIDAY
For Central Press Canadian

Onions are one vegetable, which can be grown in the same soil year after year, but if the onion maggot finds them, new housing plans had best be made.

As shown in the Garden-Graph these maggots get into the onion bulb and cause rot, which destroys the onion.

Once the maggots have become a pest there is little to be done except move the onion bed to a new location. A poison bait can be used to kill the small gray flies, the adult form of the larva maggot. This type of control is important, since there are several broods a year. These flies breed in fresh manure, so it should never be used on onion plantings.

Many gardners hasten to add lime to the soil when they notice moss growing in the lawn. The soil may be acid or may not. The moss is often due to a lack of nutrient, and what the soil really needs is feeding with a fertilizer.

Newly set trees, whether they were planted last fall or this spring, must be thoroughly watered if the weather is dry. Remember, it takes time for roots to get established and really working.

Wife of Man With Mother Fixation Has to Make a Life for Herself on the Side, Mother Will Come First as Long as She Lives

Dear Miss Chatfield:

Eighteen months ago I married a brilliant young lawyer—the only son of a widowed mother. He is considered very well off financially and his mother has a sizeable income of her own. Except for the first two months of our marriage, she has lived with us and has been mistress of the whole situation. My husband confides in her, goes to her with all of his troubles and successes, and they sit and talk in undertones until I enter the room. Then the conversation between them suddenly turns to the weather and other unimportant things. My husband's only recreations are golf and talking to his mother. I am utterly left out. I have been asked to join women's clubs, book and bridge clubs, etc., but my husband objects to this, saying he can't afford such extravagance.

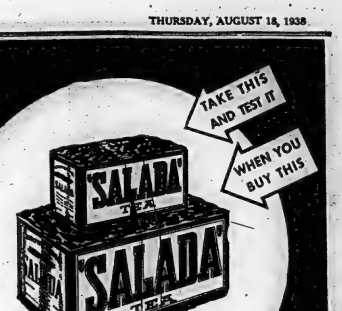
Isn't there anything I can do? I love my husband and want to be happy and make him happy, but I can't do it with a selfish, doting mother-in-law between us. Why can't she let me have my life, as she has had hers? If she so dearly loves her son, don't you think she should help him to make his marriage a success? Won't you say something about the mother who refuses to relinquish her son to his wife?

UNHAPPY WIFE.

Answer:

Unhappy Wife, all the perfume of Araby won't sweeten this situation and nothing anybody can say will make your mother-in-law relinquish her son to you. She is a possessive mother and she will cling to her son as long as she lives. She is not going to change her attitude toward him, and she is not going to change her attitude toward you.

Now face the bitter truth and instead of raging inwardly and outwardly over something you can't correct, school yourself to accept it as graciously as possible, which means hardening your heart to your husband to such an extent that you won't be hurt with him when you now are. Although you are married, you have your own life to lead and it will be miserable or moderately contented according to the pattern you cut and follow. Lose off nagging about the separate establishment and tell your husband that since you have no responsibility for the housekeeping you have much time on your hands and feel the necessity for outside activities and association with people. Tell him that your membership in book, bridge and civic clubs can't cost him more than a few dollars a month which you are sure he can afford. If he refuses tell him you'll get a job and pay your own dues.



You should go out and take some golf lessons, so you can join him in his hobby. This will give you an opportunity for private conversation with him when you play a few foursomes and opportunity to enlarge your acquaintance when you make it a foursome. M-I-L can't trail you around the course. You'll have her blocked on golf days.

Now take the bull by the horns and tell your husband that you are not satisfied with things as they are. That your relationship is set in a mould hard as stone; not even the constant dripping of your tears will wear away that stone. Of course, these sons with mother fixations should never get married but they do and their poor wives pay the piper.

You Can Apply It With This Subtle Black Crepe Frock

By PRUNELLA WOOD

THERE simple but very subtle black crepe dress is by a Paris designer, Balenciaga, who appears to know just what American women prefer. The sketches here are of a single model, with a neck-line that can be changed with the aid of a scarf. This scarf treatment is shown at top. In the other sketch of the dress, the scarf is worn as a sash belt and the bat wing bodice is folded into itself to give a basque effect.

In the low-necked version, summer accessories are suggested; in the other, advance fall millinery.

Black frock is missing from it. This

HOW YOU CAN Attract MEN

OF course, you have no men friends. If so you've yourself become dull, cross, and nervous. Men like lively, peppy girls—girls with plenty of energy to go places and enjoy life.

Don't let love and romance pass you by. Help build up your pep and you, too, should have gay friends.

Here's good advice: Start taking time-proven, reliable Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and note the difference. This famous Compound, made especially for women from wholesome herbs and roots, helps Nature tone up your system and thus soothes jumpy nerves and gives you more pep to really enjoy life.

Try out this notice NOW as a reminder to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound TO-DAY without fail.

For over 60 years one woman has told another how to go "smiling thru" distress from female functional disorders with Pinkham's Compound.

But Why Do Moles Want to Dig Holes?

GOODNIGHT STORIES

By MAX TRELL

THE OTHER afternoon Father came into the house and said: "My goodness! Those moles have come back to the garden again. They're ruining our whole lawn."

Frank and Dinah looked up from their books. "What are moles, Father?"

"Yes, what are moles? Tell us please," Knarf and Hankie added. They were the two shadows who belonged to the children and always followed them about in their footsteps.

Father didn't hear the two shadows, but he heard the two children.

Little Animals

"Moles?" he repeated. "Why, they're little animals who live underground. They dig tunnels with their teeth and don't see very well."

"And why do they spoil lawns?"

"Well, they don't mean to spoil them, I guess. But they do, just the same. They dig their tunnels right under the grass, and that makes the grass stop growing, and when the grass stops growing in a lawn—why, that's the end of those lawns."

They dig tunnels with their teeth.

The children were silent for a moment or two. Then little Frank asked: "What are you going to do to make them go away?"

"I suppose I'll have to set a trap for them. I don't like to do that. But I don't know any other way to make them go away. Now if such a way that the moles could understand us, that one could go to the edge of the lawn and call down one of the tunnels to the moles, 'Moles! Listen to me!' he could say. 'Father is going to set a trap for you. So you'd better pack your trunks and call for the moving van and move away!'"

Knarf Can Do It

"But none of us can talk to the moles," Frank said.

"Yes! Yes! I can talk to the moles!" Knarf shouted at this moment. "I'll run out and warn them. Let me go to them please!"

No one heard the shadow boy except Hankie, the shadow girl. She said: "It's no use your shouting, Knarf. You can't go out. You have to stay right here until all the lights are put out."

"Humph," said Knarf at last when he saw that no one was listening to him. "I'll wait until it gets dark. Then I'll tell the moles to move away. But just the same it's not fair that I can't go right away. It's not fair at all."

A solution of the commuter's dress problem is found in these long cooled ensembles done in neat prints. A nice model has the cross of chiffon, the long, fitted coat, of crepe with wide red velvet making the collar and double-breasted buttons. The print is red and white in a small square motif, and both crepe and chiffon are the same.

Tweed

Tweed — The members of the Tweed Horticultural Society with their families held a basket picnic at Tweed Memorial Park on Monday afternoon.

If you could come with us to Libby's Canadian Kitchens during the tomato season you would quickly convince yourself that Libby's patented "Gentle Press" method (Canadian patent No. 334,356) does bring to you the succulent juices of garden-fresh tomatoes with a taste-pleasing flavour that is exclusively Libby's.

Standing at the "Gentle Press" machine, you would sense its magical performance, as before your eyes it rejects the tough outer skin—the bitter tenseas from seeds and coarse fibers—and separates these parts that mar flavour—extracting only the nature's own, useful juices. Before Libby's invented this "Gentle Press" process, a large portion of these undesirable parts of the tomato were crushed into a pulp and became a part of the so-called juice which enters into tomato products—tomato juice—tomato soup—tomato catchup—tomato soup.

The tomatoes themselves are heavily laden with vitamin B and delightful juices. They are the result of twenty-five years of careful selection of seeds from the juiciest, most flavourful tomatoes of each year's crop. The result is that Libby's tomatoes today are firm and smooth with practically no skin blemishes—a tenderloin heart—and comparatively few soft seeds—but full of luscious appetite-provoking juices. These are grown right at Libby's Canadian Kitchens and picked and processed all within a few hours.

Libby's make this friendly challenge. The next time you are at your grocer's, ask for a can of Libby's and try the "Gentle Press" TOMATO JUICE, TOMATO SOUP and TOMATO CATCHUP. Taste them yourself—ask the whole family to compare them with any Tomato Products they have ever eaten. If you do not agree that they are positively the most flavourful—the very best you have tasted—Libby's will cheerfully refund DOUBLE the purchase price.

Here are other delicious Libby soups you will enjoy, sold under the "Gentle Press" Money Back Guarantee: PEA—VEGETABLE—ASPARAGUS—SPINACH—SCOTCH BROTH.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

He got to his patient's house and, climbed the stairs. The other children had been sent away, and the husband met him in the upper hall, a thin, inaffected man with faded blue eyes.

"She's frightened, Doctor. I've never known her to be like this. She's been uneasy right along."

"She'll be all right. Maybe. She's never had any trouble, before."

"I tell her that. But she says she's had a premonition. Well, we're in your hands—and God's."

The baby arrived that morning, that evening. It had been a long, hard labor, but normal enough. Nevertheless Chris was not entirely easy. The mother looked exhausted, and he spoke to the nurse.

"There's no history of hemorrhage, but- I'd have some ice ready."

Then he went down and called Katie, to find her in a state of nervous excitement.

"I'll have to stay awhile, Katie."

"Is the baby here?"

"Yes, fine."

"You come right home and get dressed, or I'll never forgive you, Chris."

"Can't you get along without me? They'll understand."

She was crying. Her voice was barely audible. "I won't go home. I've told you that."

She hung up the receiver and Chris was standing at the bottom of the stairs again. The mother seemed all right, but Chris still had a sense of apprehension. He stayed until a quarter to eight. Henry followed him down to the door.

"I'll be back in an hour or two," he said. "I'll be at the Staunton Lewis's if you need me."

But he was miserably uncomfortable as he left. He dressed hurriedly and in silence, with Katie restless in the bed behind him. There were only twenty minutes late. Katie was profuse with her apologies.

"This thing of being married to a doctor!" she said. "No hours, no fun, no anything. I just got him here, and that's all!"

She was very much at her ease, even when Staunton offered an arm to take her out to dinner. The excitement had brought color to her face, and she looked pretty in her new dress and knew it. Smiling and gay, she dominated the table. Chris watched her from under his shaggy eyebrows, appreciating her and saying little.

Katie was unaware of his silence, there in that big room with its high ceiling, its man serving, its glittering glass and shining silver. Some day she'd have that would have a place like it, and she lost no detail of the service or of Beverly's quiet dress and her pearls.

"She's lovely," she thought with a quick pang of jealousy. "She's not happy, but she's lovely."

It was toward the end of the meal that Chris was called to the telephone to hear Henry's voice, almost a whisper. Chris.

"She's gone, Doctor."

"Who's gone?"

"Mother. She's—dead, Doctor." He did not go back to the dining room.

x x x

Before daybreak Katie roused to see him coming into their room and raised her head from the pillow.

"Well!" she said. "The idea of you running off and leaving me like that! I was never so ashamed in my life."

He stood over her bed, staring down at her with his face set and his eyes burning. As with Dick when Lily died, he could have killed her, strangled her with his hands. But he only made a sort of desperate gesture and turned away.

"Sorry," he said. "I killed a woman tonight."

She sat straight up in her bed. "Killed a woman!"

"That's what I said," he told her, and went out.

When Olga went downstairs that morning, she found him asleep in his office with his head on his desk. Later on she roused him with a cup of coffee and he went upstairs and changed his clothes. But he was different after that. Some of his confidence had gone.

"I don't blame you, Doctor," Henry said. "But Mother set such a store by you."

"Don't, for God's sake, Henry!"

x x x

Luckily he was busy. The war boom began that year. Men and women, new to machines, were drawn into the mills, into factories, into plants of every sort by the high wages, and because they were new to machines, the accidents took their toll of them. Plenty of money now also, more and more automobiles and the accidental on the streets as well as in the factories. Chris was overworked, it was an epidemic again, but an epidemic of prosperity and its concurrent trouble. Chris, in the house only for office hours now, and then only again.

Then one day Katie came home from a Red Cross meeting to find her brother Jim standing in her living room, his hands in his pockets and his grin cynical as he surveyed her.

"Well, here's the jailbird!"

"You needn't shout it. The servants—"

"The servants! High and mighty these days, aren't you?"

He looked well, however. He was bigger, broader, more powerful. But his clothes were ill-fitting; and Katie surveyed him with distaste.

"You're not going to camp here on me, Dick," she said firmly.

"That's a welcome for you! Who said I was going to camp here? I'm going to stay with you, my dear, and you're going to get me out of the country. I'm wanted for murder."

"I won't have you dragging us down. We worked hard to get where I am, and I won't have it."

She had reverted to the old Katie then, fierce and defensive. She knew it herself, hearing her own words, and wearily she took out her hat and ran her hand over her hair.

"I won't let you do it, Dick," she said more quietly. "I won't go back to where I was."

CHAPTER XXXVI

Dick had no plans apparently. He borrowed some money from Katie, and when the doorbell rang and they heard Bob Barrett's voice in the front hall, she snuggled Dick down in the back room. But she was in a bad humor when Barrett came in, and later on when he attempted to kiss her, she pushed him away pettishly.

"Oh, let me alone, Bob! You'll she said. "What do you think I am?"

When she had got rid of him, she went downstairs, but there was no sign of Dick. The centre drawer of Chris's desk was open, however and she went over and surveyed it.

"Well, anyhow," she thought, "he'd get nothing there."

But she was mistaken. Dick had found something there—a child's picture, on the back of which was written the name of a girl he used to know. A long time afterward he was to admit that he "had liked a girl once, but somebody got ahead of me." And of course he knew that "somebody."

Two days later Jerry Ames was starring at Dick across the table. The man bore a faint resemblance to some one he knew, but he could not place him.

"I understand you have something to sell."

"So I have," said Dick with his impudent smile, and drew a photograph from his pocket. "That's for sale, Mr. Ames, and all that goes with it."

Jerry looked at it. No question now of what was happening to him. He merely opened the desk and got out his checkbook. "I'll give you five hundred dollars."

"Better add another cipher to it, Ames."

"You'll take that and like it!"

He knew it was only temporizing of a long read, but he needed time to think, and when Dick came back ten days later, Jerry had done for him, some pretty desperate thinking.

"Nothing doing," he said. "You'd better get out of here before I throw you out."

"It's like that, is it?"

"It's exactly like that."

"Well, it's your trouble, not mine."

"I'll take care of that. And get out before I tramp on you for the dirty worm you are."

That night he waited until Beverly was alone in her room. Going in, he found her at the window, looking down over the city. She turned, faintly surprised, when he came in. It was rare for him now to spend an evening in the house.

"Anything wrong, Jerry?"

"I'd like to talk to you. I'm—well, I'm in a bit of a jam, Beverly. Do you mind if I ring for a highball?"

"No. What sort of jam?"

He waited, however, until the tray had come. His hands were shaking as he mixed the drink, but she saw that he was entirely sober. Then, after a sip or two, he bent forward and told her.

I'm being blackmailed, Bev. Not much yet, but those things grow. There's only one thing to do, and that's to come clean and stand up. I'm no angel, but at least I'm a man."

"It's a woman, of course."

"It was a woman, a girl. She's dead."

He told her the whole story then, skipping nothing. Knowing that it was the end of their life together, but knowing, too, that she would keep his secret. She moved when he told her of that meeting with Chris, but she made no comment.

"Then you knew, and Chris Arden knew, that while you were marrying me this girl was having your child?"

"Yes. I've told you. She wanted the baby. God knows why."

"And now she's dead. Where is the child, Jerry?"

"Arden found a home for it. The people have adopted it."

She got up then, and took a great deal of trouble, didn't he, so that I could marry you."

"He did the best he could. Give him credit for that."

The next afternoon Chris found her alone in the downtown office and realized that this was a new Beverly, one he had never seen before, icy, quiet, unsmiling.

"I came," she said, "to try to discover why you have played God with me and wrecked my life."

"I never tried to play God with you, Beverly. If what I did was wrong—"

"And that last night when I called you up and told you I was frightened, Chris, you let me go, knowing what you did?"

"I thought you wanted to go, my dear."

When at last she had closed the door behind her and gone, he knew that she carried away with her a resentment which separated them more completely even than her marriage.

He did not see her again until America had entered the war.

Captain Arden of the Medical Corps was once again reorganizing himself after the battle of Ypres. He opened his eyes, gazed for a second into the white ceiling above him, and then closed them again. There was a pain in his head, and he was very tired. He was in a hospital, he knew that, and he remembered the battle, the wounded coming in, the long hours of operating. He had been in the operating room for forty-eight hours, and he was tired.

Presently he opened his eyes again and looked around. He was in a hospital, long wards with connecting covered passageways, scattered buildings, and some of the wards still not ready. There was a story that the Old Man, having looked things over, had banged into his headquarters and called Washington on the telephone.

"I've got a division here," he said, "and a hospital with nothing in it. I've tried every way I know to get the stuff. Now I'm ordering it myself. They tell me it will cost about twelve thousand dollars."

"You can't do that, General. Sorry, but you see it has to go through channels."

"Can't, hell! I'm ordering it and you can deduct it from my pay!"

That night he was hung up, chuckling, and after that things began to come in.

Chris was busy, as were all the rest. After breakfast, he prowled and made his rounds. Now that he was at work his irritation had gone. He was contented with the contentment of a man who has left behind him for an indefinite time all the burdens and the small annoyances of a personal life. Here he had ceased to be a person. He was a small cog in a mighty machine functioning efficiently but impersonally. Somewhere overseas there was a war, and sometime they would be there.

"Old Man's getting ready. Any day now."

There were lectures at night, and twice a week a medical officer gave them lessons in conversational French. They sat on their hard chairs like schoolboys, grinning at him with his blackboard. There was one phrase that never failed to get a laugh and a cheer: "Please to give me your name and address," and translated on the blackboard into "Donnez-moi votre nom et sa-dress, sil voo play."

Chris had not wanted to be sifting hers a surgeon in a man's war, but he had tried to get into the line and failed.

"We need men like you, Doctor, on the medical side. We've got men enough on fodder—that was the phrase then—but we'll need surgeons.—Not so dramatic, perhaps, but—"

He had not told Katie until after he had gone. Then he had gone back to her, and she had been sullen and suspicious.

"I suppose you never thought of me," she said. "What am I to do while you're gone maybe for years?"

UNITED STATES

Provincial cabinet ministers and university officials.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Washington, Aug. 18 (AP)—State Department officials declared today President Roosevelt's speech at Kingston today as an extension of Pan-American Doctrine.

In his speech at Queen's University the President declared the U.S. will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other Empire and called the Dominion a member in the fellowship of the Americas.

Hitherto the doctrine has been interpreted as applying solely to the Inter-American Republics. It asks the United States' determination to oppose any European or non-American power in the western hemisphere.

When the doctrine was originally stated by President Monroe Dec. 2, 1823, the declaration excluded colonies already established in the Western Hemisphere by European powers.

President Roosevelt's speech recalled his last Pan-American address at Buenos Aires at the meeting of the Western Hemisphere would join in resisting aggression from without. It was interpreted here as a statement of a new Pan-American Doctrine policy.

The President's inclusion of Canada in "the fellowship of the American Republics" was unprecedented here as to the possibility of the Dominion some day becoming a member of the Pan-American Union.

Canada has participated in various inter-American gatherings but never has sought membership in nor has it been invited to join the Pan-American Union.

At the last Pan-American Conference, held in Montevideo in 1933, the late delegation of Ecuador conducted a resolution which provided for the admission of Canada to the Pan-American Union and Canadian membership in Pan-American conferences.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 18 (CP)—All the indices of Toronto Exchange were down a little at noon and the early afternoon showed no change of trend but trading assumed an even slower quality. Only 24,000 shares changed hands in the first three hours.

Base Metal shares comprised the strongest group, all the leaders posting gains but weakness in the oil, paper issues put the balance slightly on the down side. Index spots in the gold list included Macassa, Wright-Hargreaves, Preston, Macleod-Cockshutt and McIntyre.

Steels, Utilities and Foods chalked up more losses than gains and drug beverages, senior oils and building issues were generally steady. Ability Preferred was also a point.

A drop of about 5 cents for Okalta and a similar gain for Anglo-Canadian were the main changes in the western oil list.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 18 (AP)—A few motors and specialties edged higher in today's stock market as many recent leaders either stood still or dipped fractions to a point.

The list was at its best in the forenoon, although outstanding strong spots were scarce. Light selling turned the list lower for most issues in later proceedings. Near the closing hour minor losses predominated.

Transfers were about 500,000 shares.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Another Advance In Egg Prices

Toronto, August 18— Prices moved into still higher ground for eggs during yesterday's session of the local produce market while cheese in the retail trade, butter and churning cream eased.

Continued scarcity of fresh receipts brought about another rise on the egg market. In view of the better values obtained, shipments being diverted to Montreal, jobbers and dealers here experienced difficulty in filling orders for good demand. Undergraders, however, were reported dragging. Graded shipments cleared readily at 26c to 28 1-2c for grade A-large, 27c to 27 1-2c for medium, 23 1-2c to 24c for C grades. Ungraded eggs advanced 1c per dozen on top grades to 26c for A-large, 25c for medium, 20c, 21c for B's and 18c for C grades, and 19c increase was noted in prices to the retail section of the market.

Arrivals of fresh receipts mantered to keep pace at the easier prices on the butter market. Traders were still displaying a cautious attitude and showed little interest in other than small lot offerings. Ontario creamery solids sold for 23c for No. 1 grades and 22 1-4c for 38 scores. Sales were reported in Western markets at 23 1-4c. Prints turned over at the unchanged prices of 25c to 25 1-2c for top grades and 24 1-4c to 24 3-4c for 38 score. Buyers were paying the lower range of 23c to 23c for No. 1 grade churning creamery (country trade prices).

Cheese, to the wholesale trade, presented a quiet market, with no change in quotations. In the retail division values were reduced to 14c for new large, 15 1-4c for twins and to 16c for triplets.

Cheese Higher in Montreal

Montreal, August 18.—(CP)—The overseas market for cheese improved slightly today according to the Dominion Department of Agriculture weekly report. The general trend was fractionally higher. The supply of higher-grade eggs continued light, and prices improved as much as a half cent. Butter prices were mixed with prints and solids easier and the wholesale jobbers' price for No. 1 pasteurized a shade higher.

Creamery butter prices to retail dealers sold for 24 1-4c to 25c and solids for 23 1-4c to 24 1-4c. Western butter delivered here was offered at 23 1-4c. Quebec No 1 pasteurized price to jobbers was 23 1-4c. Receipts: 506 boxes.

Cheese sold at 14 1-4c a pound for Ontario white, 14 1-4c to 14 3-8c for Ontario colored 13 7-8c for Quebec white and 14c for Quebec colored. Receipts: 2,060 boxes including 193 for export.

Graded egg shipments in used trade cases sold at 29c to 30 1-2c a dozen for extras, 27 1-2c to 28c for Amedium, 24c for B and 21c to 21 1-2c for C. Receipts 493 cases.

Child Enjoys Helping His Parents

Youngster is Happier if He is Given Job to Do Occasionally

(By LISA GRENELLE)

IN A RECENT magazine article for parents Margaret Ilsley of Maryland, mother of several children, wrote:

"All sincere work the children had been playing on our little beach. All that long, hot afternoon, as I kept an eye on them out of the kitchen door, I had worked. All afternoon long I had envied the children their carefree fun.

"When I called them in to dress for supper, five-year-old Bob came in with a grouch. He would not do anything. Impatiently I spoke: 'If this afternoon you have been just fun. Now get busy and get ready for supper.'

"He turned on me with indignation: 'You have all the fun,' he declared.

"'I have fun!' What have I been doing to have fun?

"'You do the care of the twins and you cook the food,' he replied."

Nothing to Show

But for Bob's point of view, what did he have to show? Damaged pants and a new habit to change. While lucky Mother, for her afternoon's occupation, had a hot supper, two satisfied babies and a pile of freshly-ironed clothes. Was it any wonder that Bob was grouchy?

An intelligent and open-minded mother, Mrs. de Mar learned from the bitter words of her small son, and never again deprived her children of the chance to help. From then on they all helped her with her chores, and got a great "kick" out of the close relationship between them and their mother because of their assistance—and probably franker. There's nothing that brings people together like working together. In the two hour minor losses predominated.

Transfers were about 500,000 shares.

Mayor's Reception Guest

Through some of the windows of the leading coaches could be seen the backs of the retinue, playing cards, reading and otherwise engrossed in personal affairs. Scarcely a glance was given those who thronged outside the train to catch a fleeting view. Local section men, and conductors who were placed on the train at Kingston travelled the train constantly, making minute inspections of inside and outside gear. During the stop the Mayor's personal telegram conveying the Civic welcome to the Royal visitors and those of the Bay of Quinte area to a reception tonight was handed to an aide at one of the coach doors, and signed for.

Shortly after 5.40 locomotives stood ready to couple on as relief in the event a change was necessary. The train was due at 10.40 next.

Hardly had the train stopped when engine crew and assistants on the east yard were clambering over and on the engine, grooming it for the run to Kingston. Water flowed into her tender from convenient spouts at the platform. conductors and wheel tappers made their last minute inspection of the train while on the east of a ship leaving its dock, the train backed slowly and gently and pointed into the last part of the eastern run.

Engine Highly Polished

To all outward appearances, the engine which will be the pride of the United States to visit Ontario and pass through Belleville, might have been fresh from the shops of the Canadian National lines, save for the fact that the paint work was more highly polished and bore the special passenger extra white flags which mark the royal train from stanchions. The coaches, though passed the test hastily for which Pullmans are noted, differed little from ordinary ones, save for the C.N.R. monogram on Railroad gold lettering.

Of the simple fashion by the local engine crews, the special slowed to a stop with almost immediately the engine cab east after taking on water was as smoothly operated as a Pullman. The yards it had been brought to a slow speed, its exhaust almost invisible as it rolled to a standstill.

Met By Superintendent

The train was met by charge of Engineer William Kelson of Minto with a service record of thirty-six years. Engineer Kelson, who is Toronto, Here it was taken over by the Belleville crew and Alex Saunderson, master mechanic of the local division who accompanied the engine to Kingston. At Kingston the train will be met by Engineer Ed. Vanwoodenbeck of the local division, at Toronto the train was guarded heavily by Canadian Mounted Police, Provincial Police and special C.N.R., police. During the stop in Belleville, many of them alighted from the train and took long walks to stretch the coach doors. The too-enthusiastic greeters were warned to keep off the tracks during the train's halt. The special left Toronto at 6.00 a.m.

California Negro Adds Another Crown; Junior Softballers Drop First Game

Armstrong Shoots Crest of Amazing Campaign By Taking Ambers' Featherweight Title

Sensational Negro Now Holds Three National Titles

LOST FOUR ROUNDS

Three of These Given to Ambers on Account of Low Blows

(By Cayle Talbot, Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 8 (AP)—Shooting the crest of an amazing 10 months' campaign that has seen him dethrone three title-holders and run his string of consecutive victories to 39, Henry Armstrong, relentless little negro, today is the unprecedented champion of three fistic divisions — featherweight, lightweight and welterweight.

The line that signifies like a machine added the lightweight crown to his collection last night in a rip-tearing 15-round battle with Lou Ambers, that had a crowd of 18,546 — practically uprooting the chairs in Madison Square Garden.

Raised Rookus

All the conclusion when Armstrong's sudden blow was lifted, the audience raised a ruckus for 10 minutes and scores of straw hats sailed through the ring, scores of them dispatched no doubt in a wild hope that they would clip Referee Billy Kavanagh, whose vote of seven rounds to six in favor of the strong's favor decided the issue after the two judges had split.

The decision, though, though reflected admiration for the desperate little negro Ambers in defence of his title rather than any firm conviction that he had won. Except for three rounds awarded him by the referee because of Armstrong's low punching, The Associated Press scorer could give Ambers only one chapter.

Knocked Down Twice

Armstrong knocked Ambers down twice with lovely rights for counts of one and eight and again slammed the game defender clear across the ring with a knock on the button.

Several times in the early rounds Ambers looked like he was ready to fold. As at third with a terrific right winged blen and those who had backed the Herkimer, N.Y., Italian at odds of 1-3 thought he was a goner right there.

In the 5th he actually punched Armstrong all over the ring. Twice Lou connected with a series of left and rights that stopped Armstrong in his tracks, then at the bell he buckle. The negro was bleeding badly from the mouth, as he had through the fight, but he wasn't hurt, swollen, and he generally didn't look like the Armstrong this New York fans had come to know.

But Ambers didn't have the stuff to follow it up. He too was armweary and battered, and Armstrong came back to take the last two rounds and sew up the victory.

Ambers Weighs In

Ambers weighed in at 134 pounds, Armstrong 133½.

Ambers' showing was a surprise to all but his manager, Al (Wild- cost) Weill, seemed to be in a pretty fair spot among the fistic solons and for no other reason than smiling Sammy Luftspring of Toronto.

The rugged Canadian fellow welterweight defeated Sarp Saban of New York last night and supplied the only bright note of the evening for Weill who watched Ambers make a courageous but losing stand against Henry Armstrong in defence of his lightweight title.

Luftspring won on ring generalship. He piled up sufficient points in the early rounds to stave off a late rally by Saban and gain his fifth win in as many starts since signing with Weill last spring.

Luftspring's six-round victory was the first start in Madison Square Garden. He weighed 146½ against Saban's 147 pounds. On The Canadian Press score sheets the Toronto boy won the first three rounds, dropped the fourth and fifth to Saban and split the sixth. There were no knockdowns.

The results of the matches were as follows:

Men's doubles: M. Mitchell and R. Archambault (Quinte) defeated Messrs. Clare and H. Schaffer (Belleville) 6-2, 6-3, while Bud Odell and Art Cole (Country Club) defeated S. Evans and Don Smallbone (Belleville) 7-5, 6-3.

City Title Won

In a postponed mixed doubles match, for the city tennis championship, also postponed last week, Evelyn Jack and Freddie Baines, of the Bay of Quinte Country Club, defeated Jack Dickens and Jo Cruil, Belleville 7-5 and 6-3. The winning team were recipient of silver cups, emblematic to the city tennis championship. Each runner-up cup was donated by the Quinte Skating Club, sponsors of the city tennis tournament.

STIRLING RINK LOSES IN FINAL

W. J. Whitty Defeated For Henry Trophy by Buffalo Four

Toronto, Aug. 18 (CP)—Leading bowlers of Ontario and Buffalo swept into the fourth day of the Ontario tournament today with the Williamson doubles and the Ellis Trophy competition as the centre of interest.

George Hall skipped his Toronto St. Matthew's rink to a 23-9 victory over Dr. A. Walker's Hamilton Argyles in the Eaton Gold Cup final yesterday.

R. Latzert of Buffalo scored an easy victory in the Henry Trophy over W. J. Whitty's Stirling rink by 37-10.

George Hall's Toronto Granite club's disposed of the London Thistles, skipped by N. C. Hart by 18-14 and went on to win the Toronto trophy with an easier victory over a Hamilton four led by J. Dempster by 23-13.

Mr. Wheeler's Balmy Beach four captured the Ontario cup final after trailing until near the end in a close-fought competition with A. Crawford's rink from Wingham. The final score was 19-15.

Heavy rains during yesterday delayed the Williston doubles draw, so it did not get beyond the third round.

HENRY ARMSTRONG

Who wrested Lou Ambers' lightweight crown in a great fight at Madison Square Gardens last night, leaving Armstrong master of all he surveys from the featherweight to the welterweight divisions. With devastating punches the relentless Armstrong continually poured leather in the general direction of Ambers' midsection during exhibition of human endurance last night. ## "BUB" GAULIN SAVES GAME FOR THE CEMENTMEN

Hits Homer in Eighth to Tie Corbys A. C. And Game Called in 9th

"Bud" Gaulin's eighth inning circuit blow saved the Point Anne "cementmen" from defeat on their home ice last evening when darkness halted the fifth game of the city softball play-offs with the score standing Corbys A.C. three, Point Anne three. It was the second tie game of the current city series that now stands Point Anne two wins to Corbys one.

Frank Schrieter's "cementmen" broke into the scoring column with a brace of counters in the second frame, when Gaulin singled and scored on a passed ball. With two away Whitehead drew a walk and wiggled around to second to score on Johnnie Sanders' one base blow. Chuck Barnett's charges retaliated in their half of the third with two runs to knot the count. Schrieter opened with a single, but was called out at the plate on a close decision. Jim Barriage got scored on a fielder's choice that saw Klier safe.

Klier Scores Tying Run

The latter romped home with the tying run on Reid's subsequent hit to centre, a run-further decision, the evidence until the top half of the a life when Bero bobbled and later top in the tourney. Is dealt ABOVE. At the left is Harry Cooper, winner last year, who will be defending his crown. Top CENTRE, is Paul Runyan, diminutive winner of this year's United States P.G.A. title. Below Paul are Lawson Little, LEFT, who took the Canad an Crown in 1934 and holds eighths when Klier opened with a single and scored on Cole and McMartin bit behind him. Gaulin, the first homester to bat in the last half of the eighth, drove a long hit to deep left to tie the score with a home run. Both teams got men aground in the ninth, but could not score before Umpire Marsh called the match on account of impending darkness.

Johnnie Sanders hurled nine hits ball for the homesiters, while Eddie Schrieter kicked for 3 safeties. Both pitchers were boarding down nicely in the clutches, however. Chuck Barnett with a home and two singles in four tries led the hitters, as Sanders had three one base blows to help his own cause. Centrefield Jim Murray got a brace of hits while Jim Barriage, and McMartin led Corbys with two apiece, getting two hits each. Sero handled nine chances with only one bobble, while Whitehead booted one in seven. The homesters were seen hacking down on the clutches, as the batters dominated the piece somewhat.

Napanee, Aug. 18.—Led by a fine pitching and hitting display by old Chief Jack Williams, Kingston Locos won a replayed tie game from Napanee Gibbards here last night 6 to 3 and moved into a tie with Picton for third place. The game completed the schedule, and Kingston and Picton will play a sudden-death game here Friday night for third place. ## BELMONT JUNIORS LOSE FIRST GAME TO KINGSTON NINE

Score is 1-0 With Locals Failing to Come Thru in Pinches

Failing to come through with the much needed hits in the clutches the Belleville Belmonts dropped the initial game of the first round junior O.A.S.A. playdowns to Kingston "Cradle" by the remarkable softball score of one to nothing before 2000 bald and bleared fans at Kingston last evening. The return game is scheduled to be played in Belleville next Wednesday night.

Pinch hitters came through for the Townsend-led Belmonts in the later innings, but the "cradle" subsequent hits were a minus quantity as the Limestone City junior scored a big run in the third frame and with fine defensive ball constituted hold for their lead, that resulted in victory. The hits of the night were evenly divided, with both nines garnering seven safeties throughout the piece. Dixon, Carson, the Townsend, scoundasman, and Sharpe, Kingston's hurler pitched scintillating ball and only the breaks of the game gave the winners the verdict. Several close decisions on the bases went against the Belleville kids, however, and doubtless kept them from the scoring sheet. Both squads fielded superbly with Coach Hawkins two standouts at plays to help the Belleville kids.

With the pitchers tops throughout the game only one extra base hit was registered, a double by Burt, Kingston third baseman in the initial frame. Both hurlers struck out five and were in no serious pinches. The lone Kingston tally of the game came in the fourth frame. Dixon, Belleville left base runners stranded in the eighth and ninth, retiring seven batters in succession with a runner on second. Whalen and Doherty, two single-hitting kids through, but were left stranded as they went down in order, Sharpe bearing down in the clutches.

The game was a brilliant exhibition of baseball between two skilled teams, and it was not over until Bill Sharpe, Kingston twirler worked a fast double play to cut off Belleville's ninth inning rally.

Kingston juniors, Champions of Ontario favorite softball last year, opened their campaign in the game in the third inning on successive singles.

OSHAWA JUNIORS WIN LAKESHORE

Oshawa, Aug. 18.—Oshawa juniors won the Lakeshore grouping of the O.B.A. and the right to enter the provincial playdowns when they handed Cobourg juniors a 6-2 defeat at Alexandra Park Wednesday afternoon. The game which was the third of the best-of-three series, was a thriller throughout, with sparkling defensive play by both teams keeping the 600-odd fans on the edge of their seats throughout. High Pockets McCabe, Oshawa's slugging star, was good in winning twinkler and, although Cobourg got six hits, he scattered them well, struck out eight and did not allow a base on balls.

Red Sedlak, on the losers' mound had two bad innings, the fourth and fifth, when Oshawa batted seven hits for five runs. During the remainder of the game he settled down and struck out seven, hurling a nice brand of ball. Oshawa led the Cobourg hitters with three safeties, while Sealand, peppery catcher of the Oshawa team, was the batting star of both of the Cobourg runs.

Another sports championship was won by a Belleville native son recently when Hubert Pigden, well known Belleville Collegiate track and field athlete, won the intermediate pole vault at the Canadian Athletic Commission Camp. Bill received a gold medal in victory. It was his splendid showing at the June district athletic meet at Kingston that won for him the two weeks' training at the O.A.C. Lake Couchiching camp. Although we have no immediate records available we have been informed that Pigden's feat of winning the provincial pole vault brings the first O.A.C. championship to Belleville.

Young Pigden excells at other field events, but is centering his efforts on the pole vault with hopes of gaining the 1940 Canadian Olympic team. In two years time Pigden should shoot near his peak and who knows, Belleville may boast of a Canadian Olympic star yet. There seems to be more talent taken in track and field events locally or late, which prompts us to reiterate previous statements relative to the revival of a track and field meet to be held in connection with the Belleville Fair. Just because it failed to function on occasion does not mean it cannot succeed now.

After five games in the City softball schedule, the standing now reads, Point Anne two, Corbys one, with two tie games. Last night the "cementmen" came from behind to tie Corbys three all, thanks to Bud Gaulin's timely circuit blow. Just when the boys will get out of the trenches ready for the O.A.A. playdowns is hard to say, but they'll later return to Point Anne to continue where they left off last night. Although he "cementmen" out-hit Corbys 13 to 9, both hurlers pitched steady ball in the clutches, with Frank Schrieter's charges getting men on in every inning.

The local punt sailors are at it again. Yesterday's Belleville Club "A" team was soundly trounced by Skipper "Cap" Smith, at the helm of the Joka. It seems the Jokas and Maurice Callaghan's After Yer 3rd became implicated in a collision on the south leg of the second lap. At any rate the After Yer 3rd finished first and established a new course record of one hour, 21 minutes and 24 turn day time.

Shooting for Canadian Open Golf Crown at Toronto

With the greatest galaxy of stars in the history of a Canadian tournament on hand the Canadian open golf championship gets under way today at Toronto's Mississauga course. All the links will be on hand in an attempt to keep the trophy from staying in Canada, something they have succeeded in doing for the past 20 years. And for the first time in seven years there will be a challenge from abroad in the person of Sid Brews, South African and French Open champion and ranked by many as the equal to Henry Cotton. By ELEANOR C. KORNIG

Their names properly designated them—Anna and Mary Brown; good, honest, adequate and colorful names, if one will see color in plainly colorful things. Two cheerful, contented spinsters, respectively thirty-nine and forty-one years, their faces plain but beautiful, their eyes kind and shining for the least unwonted events in their quiet neighborhood, their mouths sweetened by curves of patience and goodness.

Love at the worthiest minting bound the sisters together, so the day Anna remarked that her hair was markedly streaked with gray, Mary, noting a sudden little twitching of the older sister's mouth, dutifully remarked she supposed her hair would be turning soon, too. Then, to relieve the moment's strain, she asked:

"Did you know neighbors are moving in next door, Anna? My, the house has been empty long enough; I'll be glad to have some life over there."

"Why, yes," Anna acknowledged, "and over a week ago."

"Must have moved in while I was away," returned Mary, who had been attending to a sick neighbor some distance away. "How shall we like over there, and do you know who they are?" she asked inquisitively.

"Why,—why, just one, that's all," replied the older sister, while the mystified younger woman noted with inward astonishment a really becoming flush rising in her smooth cheek.

"It's just a man—I—I—he's been over here asking about things — lights, the fire, food . . ."

"Just a man—but—" Mary followed up.

Anna broke in upon her sister's exclamation somewhat testily.

"Oh, he told me he was a widower."

That night Anna showed marked hesitation upon leaving for a week's sojourn.

"There isn't the least thing to worry about, Anna dear," said Mary kindly but forcibly, and the sister reluctantly set forth.

"There'll be no nonsensical happenings now," Mary almost said aloud, as she settled down beside the evening lamp with her paper.

A soft knocking at the back door interrupted her before she had turned a page. Somewhat tremblingly she hastened through the kitchen. A small, stupidly, yet deliberately built man stood in the doorway.

"It's Miss Mary, I know," he said winningly, as he loosed up some what pleadingly into Mia Mary's soft blue eyes.

"Why, yes, it is" she replied with unwonted welcoming . . .

Miss Anna returned in half of the promised week.

"Looks as if the hens hadn't laid much while I was away," she remarked sniffily, on the first night of her return.

Miss Mary, who could not tell a lie, bent guiltily over the strawberry shortcake she was preparing, and did not volunteer a reply.

The first even latent antagonism of their lives threatened the sisters as they sat down to supper. There was so much to say that neither could say. Finally Miss Mary stood up, a bright spot on each cheek.

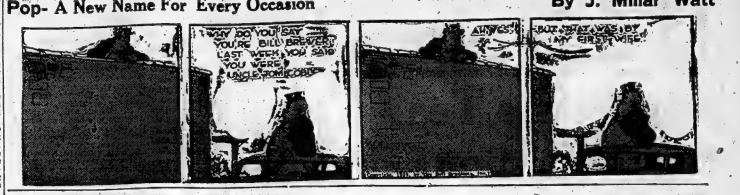
"It's a shame, with so much to waste here, that poor Mr. Barton has to eat alone," she exclaimed recklessly.

"Let's . . . ." Anna started to suggest, when a slight knock sounded on the back door. Mr. Barton accepted with gratitude the sisters' invitation. Soon all three were chatting, the little man possessing the fatal gift of drawing out undreamed-of qualities in his two rapturing auditors.

"You ladies have certainly been kind to me" he remarked, as he prepared to make a graceful exit. "I only hope Mrs. Barton-to-be can cook half as well as either of you," he added naively.

The two ladies, who had been dreading the after-hour of his departure, for certain personal reasons, vaguely heard the details of his proposed marriage. In spite of the future Mrs. Barton would arrive in two weeks.

Two weeks later Anna, who was preparing supper, was surprised at the precipitous entrance of Mary from the garden.



"They're here, and she's the sweetest little helpless thing," she exclaimed gleefully.

"Little, really?" inquired Anna, with spoon suspended.

"Yes, and she'll make such a nice neighbor—and I wonder if they have supper enough. It does seem as if we ought . . . ." she doubtfully queried of the older sister.

President Roosevelt's Address at Queens Univ.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 18—(AP)—The text of President Roosevelt's address at Queen's University today:

To the pleasure of being once more on Canadian soil where I have passed so many of the happy hours of my life, there is added a day a very warm sense of gratitude for being admitted to the fellowship of this ancient and famous university. I am glad to join the brotherhood which Queens has contributed and is contributing not only to the spiritual leadership for which the college was established, but also to the social and public leadership in the civilized life of Canada.

An American President is precluded by our constitution from accepting any title from a foreign prince, potentate, or power. Queens University is not a prince or a potentate but it is a power. Yet I can say, without constitutional reserve, that the acceptance of the title which you confer on me today would raise no qualms in the Attorney breast of our own supreme court.

Civilization International

Civilization is not national—it is international—even though that observation—trite to most of us, is today challenged in some parts of the world. Ideas are not limited by territorial borders; they are the common inheritance of all free people. Thought is not anchored in any land, and profit of education rebounds to the equal benefit of the whole world. That is one form of free trade to which the leaders of every opposing political party can subscribe.

In a large sense we in the Americas stand changed today with maintaining of that tradition. Which, speaking recently in a similar vein in the Republic of Brazil, I indicated the Dominion of Canada in the fellowship of the Americas. And South American neighbors gave hearty acclaim. We in the Americas know the sorrow and the wreckage which may follow if the ability of men to understand one another is rooted out from among the nations.

Many of us here today know from experience, that of all the devastations of war, none is more tragic than the destruction which it brings to the processes of men's minds. Truth is denied because emotion pushes it aside. Forebearance is succeeded by bitterness. In that atmosphere humane thought can not advance.

Matter of Thought

It is impossible not to remember that for years when Canadians and Americans have met they have light-heartedly satisfied an North American friends, without thought of dangers from overseas. Yet we are awake to the knowledge that the casual questions of our greetings in earlier times today must become a matter for serious thought.

A few days ago a whisper, fortunately untrue, raced round the world that armies standing over against each other in unhappy array were to be set in motion. In a few short hours the effect of that whisper had been registered in Montreal and New York, in Ottawa and in Washington, in Toronto and in Chicago, in Denver and in San Francisco. Your businessmen and ours heard it silently; your men and ours wondered what effect that might have on their future.

We in the Americas are no longer a far away continent, to which the eddies of controversies beyond the seas have become a considerations to every congressional office and to every general staff beyond the seas. The vast amount of our resources, the vigor of our commerce and the strength of our men have made us vital factors in world peace whether we choose or not.

A Strong Citadel

Happily, you and we, in friendship and in entire understanding can look clear-eyed at these possibilities, resolving to leave no path unexplored and no technique undeveloped which may, if our hopes are frustrated, lead to a real peace of the world. Even if those hopes are disappointed, we are sure each other that this hemisphere, at least shall remain a strong citadel wherein civilization may flourish unimpaired.

The Dominion of Canada is part of the sisterhood of the British Empire. I have the assurance that the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canada by any European or any other empire.

We are good neighbors and true friends because we maintain our own rights with frankness, because we refuse to accept the twists of secret diplomacy, because we settle our disputes by consultation and because we discuss problems in the spirit of the common good. We act as good neighbously fair and helpful not only in our relations with each other but each of us at home in our relations with our own people.

Ought Not to Change

But there is one process which we certainly cannot change and probably ought not to change. This is the feeling which ordinary men and women have about events which they can understand. We wanton brutality, in regard to undemocratic reglimentation, in regard to misery inflicted on helpless peoples, or in regard to violations of accepted individual rights. At that any government, constituted as is yours and mine, can possibly undertake to help make sure that the facts are known and fairly stated. No country where thought is free can prevent every fireside and home within its borders from considering the evidence for itself and rendering its own verdict; and the sum total of these conclusions of educated men and women will, in the long run, become the national verdict.

Right and Just

That is what we mean when we say that public opinion ultimately governs policy. It is right and just that this should be the case.

Many of our ancestors came to Canada and the United States because they wished to break away from systems which forbade them to think freely and their descendants have insisted on the right to know the truth—to argue their problems to a majority decision, and, if they remained unconvinced to disagree in peace. As a tribute to our likeness in that respect, I note that the bill of rights in your country and in mine is substantially the same.

Respect Tradition

Mr. Chancellor, you of Canada who respect the educational tradition of our democratic continent will ever maintain good neighborship in ideas as we in the public service and people propose to maintain it in the field of government and of human relations. My good friend, the Governor General, in receiving an honorary degree in June at the University of Cambridge, Massachusetts, to which Mackenzie King and I both belong, suggested, that we cultivate three qualities to keep our foothold in the shifting sands of the present—humility, humanity and humor. All three qualities imbedded in education, build new bonds to reestablish free intercourse through the world and thus forth an order in which free nations can live in peace.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Racketeers in Exile"

Although a vivid expose of the world's most infamous racket, Columbia's triple-starred feature "Racketeers in Exile", at the McCarthy theatre, also presents one of the most human stories ever to reach the screen.

It centres around George Bancroft, who turns in one of the finest performances of his career. He portrays a minister's son who becomes a big-time racketeer and discovers that as a natural orator, he can easily exploit the simple religious faith of his neighbors.

Accordingly he becomes a fake evangelist and quickly rises to power. With him is the "angel", capably played by Wynne Gibson, who is reunited with the star for the first time since their sensational "Lady and Gent" made a few years ago.

His activities involve Evelyn Venable, who gives a brilliant performance as a small town organist. She innocently becomes Bancroft's shield,—one reason which delays, Gmen in "cracking" the case—and helps create a lovely triangle in the scoundrel's life.

Just as the arm of the law is closing in on him Bancroft's character undergoes a change. Torn with remorse, he decides to reform, only to plung himself and the others into a new situation, with justice having its due in the story's surprising climax.

"Racketeers in Exile" is one of Columbia's biggest recent productions. One set alone, a huge tabernacle, covered an entire sound stage when built and seated 1,200 people.

The picture is lavish with comedy. Bancroft and Miss Gibson inject humorous touches into their roles and two of Hollywood's veteran coulds, George McKay and Richard Carle get many chuckles out of their lines.

Andy Clyde in "Ankles Away", a very entertaining comedy short, entitled "In the Swim", an all technicolor musical cartoon novelty and a splendid news reel presentation, in addition to "Racketeers in Exile" combine to make a splendid bill at the McCarthy theatre.

AT THE BELLE

"The Shopworn Angel" and "Fast Company"

The dramatic story of a woman who sold her body that man so that she might send another to college, and with a beautiful memory without shattering his ideals, is the stirring theme of "The Shopworn Angel", starring Margaret Sullavan and James Stewart at the Belle Theatre.

Miss Sullavan brilliantly portrays the role of a gold-digging show-girl who marries the young native sucker, James Stewart, because she wants him to go to Yale with a memory and also because he is the first man who has ever looked upon her as a woman. Her other sweetheart is Walter Pidgeon the dashing man-about-town, who knows and loves her for what she is.

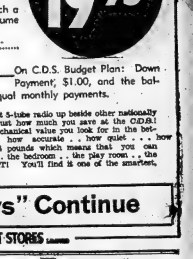
All three performances are excellent as are those of the other players including Hattie McDaniel, Nat Pendleton, Alan Curtis, Sam Levene, Eleanor Lynn and Charles D. Brown.

The period of the picture is 1917, and all the color and excitement of the World War is included. E. O. Potter deftly directed the film.

"The Shopworn Angel" also marks Miss Sullavan's debut as a singer and dancer.

"Fast Company" Unusual

Melvyn Douglas, who recently blended to new screen heights with his deft comedy portrayals adds new laurels to his career as a modern race book sleuth in "Fast Company" the associate feature now at the Belle.



Florence Rice as the feminine lead is given a complete personality change with the aid of special mature hair dress and makeup as a distinct contrast to the ingenues of her recent pictures. Also playing the ultra-modern wife of Douglas who believes that domestic and business life can be combined.

The plot presents a novelty background for a fast-moving blend of romance, mystery, drama and thrills. An inside revelation of the well-known traffic in stolen rare books provides a diverting series of intrigents leading to a murder and the breaking up of an international racket.

Miss Rice and Douglas share the adventures of the picture with a splendid supporting cast that defies the villainous attempts of the book gang to stop their efforts to solve the mystery.

Claire Dodd provides blonde allure in the role of an inside member of the book gang, who finds that romance is more dangerous than a knowledge of gang secrets. Her revelations to Melvyn Douglas, who masquerades as a roving cavalier with the knowledge of his wife, finally

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 19 (AP)—If you want to try parachute jumping, you don't have to own a parachute. That was the advice Albert Brower, eight-year-old negro boy, gave friends today. On the ground he flew a crap on the index finger of his right hand caught on a nail protruding from the side of the barn. His finger was skinned to the bone.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Modern forecasting! Everyone must realize that the weather at any place is the result of several physical processes which have taken place throughout a considerable depth of the atmosphere. The early forecaster knew that too, but he did not have at that time, say from 1870 to 1900, the data and knowledge which are available now. Formerly the forecaster studied what other observations were available. Now the forecaster has data concerning conditions for about 10,000 feet and he has a different concept of the cyclone. This concept is not perfect, but it is a notable advance over earlier concepts. With it the forecaster's work is not, however, simple but more difficult.

Japan Prepares 1,000,000 More Men To Force End of War in China

Tokyo, Aug. 19—(AP)—The Japanese government acted today to make quickly available an estimated 1,000,000 more men for the fighting forces, as negotiations with Soviet Russia and settlement of the Siberian frontier dispute reached a new stalemate.

A new order by the War Office instructed all males in the recruit division, made up of men between 20 and 34 who have not received active training, to "stand by."

This was taken to indicate they might be called soon and that Japan was planning to draw huge numbers of reinforcements into what would be a grand drive to end the war in China.

CANADA AND U. S. WEIGH SPEECHES MADE AT BRIDGE

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ivy Lea, Ont., Aug. 19—(CP)—From the stirring and brilliant scenes in this vicinity yesterday before and during dedication of the bridge ceremony that "the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other empire" and:

2. President Roosevelt's appeal to Canada to cooperate with United States in developing the power and navigation resources of the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence river.

3. Pledges voiced by President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Mackenzie King and other high officials participating in the bridge dedication to make enduring the 100 years of peace between Canada and the United States and to continue the good neighbor policy between nations.

Yeas Friend' Greeting

"Peas, friend," must always be the greeting at international bridges between Canada and United States, President Roosevelt declared. He assisted Mr. Mackenzie King in wielding the golden shovel to extend the ribbon barrier strung across the international section, of the bridge.

Mr. Mackenzie King said Canada was prepared to help in building bridges of friendship between the two countries and he expressed hope the example of internation amity as practised by Canada and United States would serve as an inspiration to the whole world.

President Roosevelt's declaration of United States concern for Canada's safety, accepted by Canada in the sense of an interpretation of the Monroe doctrine, was made at Queen's University, Kingston, Ont. University where, in the presence of Mackenzie King, himself and a great throng of people he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

NO EXTENSION MONROE DOCTRINE SAYS ROOSEVELT

President Questioned on Import of His Speech at Kingston

QUESTIONERS REFERRED

Hyde Park, N.Y., Aug. 19—(AP)—President Roosevelt indicated today that no extension of the Monroe doctrine was involved in his address at Kingston, Ont., yesterday. The president made the statement shortly this morning for an indefinite stay.

In his Kingston speech, the President asserted that the United States would not stand "idly by" if domination of Canadian soil were threatened by a foreign aggressor.

Reporters at his informal press conference informed Mr. Roosevelt of reports that the State Department in Washington interpreted his speech as an extension of the Monroe doctrine.

The President suggested that his questioners read the original language of the Monroe doctrine. He called attention to the fact that the doctrine was anything about Latin America in his Kingston talk.

London, Aug. 19—(AP)—The British government today informed Germany that it has taken a serious view of the unexplained arrest of Captain Thomas Kendrick, British passport officer in Vienna, by German secret police at the German-Swiss border.

PLAIN OF SHARON SCENE OF BATTLE

60 Arabs And 5 British Soldiers Are Killed

Jerusalem, Aug. 19—(CP)—A fresh clash between Arab partisans, Irish Guards and Scotsmen of the Black Watch and an Arab guerrilla band today brought the casualty list for two days of conflict to 65 dead and hundreds wounded.

Today's conflict occurred on the Plain of Sharon and followed close by Thursday's skirmish on the outskirts of Acre. The two days' fighting was the heaviest in Holy Land has seen in the current disorders which began nearly two years ago.

Sixty Arabs were killed—50 near Acre and six in the Plain of Sharon fight—and hundreds wounded in the two engagements, while five soldiers were killed and 30 injured. Thirteen Britons were wounded.

The Sharon fighting started near Kalkilyeh; an Arab centre, when a patrol of the Irish Guards was ambushed and a British army motor-truck damaged when it passed over a land mine.

Detachments of the Black Watch joined the skirmish, when the guards had deployed and wirelessed for aircraft an other reinforcements.

HUGE SURPLUS OF HYDRO POWER, HEPBURN CLAIMS

Letter Sent Today to Prime Minister Expressing Attitude

WATERWAYS AND RAILS

Ontario Premier Claims Province Will Resist Project

Toronto, Aug. 19—(CP)— Premier Mitchell Hepburn told Prime Minister Mackenzie King in a letter made public today the Ontario government opposed the proposed St. Lawrence waterway project on "economic" grounds.

The letter was sent today, less than 24 hours after President Roosevelt urged at the opening yesterday of an international bridge at Ivy Lea across the St. Lawrence, the early development of the river by the United States and Canadian governments to provide increased navigation and shipping facilities.

In the letter to Minister, Mr. Hepburn says, although at present time there is no surplus power to give sufficient study to this problem. I would like to know what your policy is, if any, and should you have a policy, what proposal have you to submit to this government for consideration.

Claims Ample Supply of Power

"Ontario's future power requirements are concerned, the fact is well known to you that Ontario has an ample supply for many years to come—indeed, a huge surplus—for which it must pay and receive no benefit. This unsatisfactory condition would obtain if the development had you granted us, which you had the opportunity, the right to export this surplus at a profit which would have enabled us in turn to grant a further reduction in rates to the power consumers of Ontario. It is the responsibility of this administration and not yours to provide the necessary power for our present and future requirements and in this respect we are fully cognizant of our responsibility.

Economic Opposition

"I have on various occasions ventured the opinion that the St. Lawrence waterway project could not be justified on economic grounds. Our interests are confined to power development and the Province of Ontario, we are not interested in the railway situation which has not been improved since you have been head of the Government at Ottawa. Until such time as you solve what is considered to be one of Canada's major problems of Canada—that of the railway situation—I cannot conceive how you could seriously consider spending public funds for the purpose of developing navigable public, competitive avenue of transportation which would undoubtedly have the effect of further increasing the deficits of the Canadian National Railways, thereby doing further threat to the security of the investments of thousands of men of Canada; even to the extent

'U.S. and Canada a League of Nations With Lasting Type of Disarmament'

New York, Aug. 19.—(CP)—If this "one-best" European nations would seek the road to lasting peace, let them appoint a joint commission to cross the Atlantic ocean and study the ideal institutions that exist between the United States and Canada, the New York Journal and American suggested yesterday.

In an editorial on dedication of the new Thousand Islands Bridge by Prime Minister Mackenzie King and President Roosevelt, the Hearst newspaper said the combined armies of the neighboring countries in a total population or about 140,000,000 is not 200,000 men and commented:

"The United States and Canada are thus not only a real League of Nations functioning, but they represent a permanent type of disarmament.

Europe, Asia and South America should profit, the Journal and American said, by the fact that there are two countries in the world that can live six by side without fear of one another. It continued:

"That is not only real progress, but an application of the fundamental principles of political and social humanitarianism. Canada and the United States give the lie to political cynics.... North America stands solidly for peace —a definite democratic peace."

The Herald Tribune (Republican) found nothing "very surprising" in the President's expansion of the Monroe Doctrine to include the defence of Canada.

Editorially, the newspaper said for many years now no one has imagined that the United States could remain indifferent to any threat against Canadian soil, and if the scope of the doctrine has been changed "it is only in a technical sense."

The Herald Tribune said that the President has given his statement at Kingston "a calculated portentousness" by timing it at a tense moment in international affairs.

TEACHING WOMAN TO SWIM 2 DROWN AT PETERBOROUGH

Believed Girl Stepped Off Ledge And Companion Went to Rescue

BODIES RECOVERED

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 19—(CP)—Harry Lambert, 30, photographer with the Peterborough Canoe Company, and William Evans, 40, garage mechanic were drowned last night while bathing in the Otonabee river at a point about 200 above lock 22, the first lock above here.

Evans apparently was teaching Miss Lambert to swim. There is a stone ledge running out from the east side of the river where they were bathing and about 30 feet from shore there is a drop, the water deepening to eight or nine feet. It was believed that the girl slipped off the ledge into the deep water and that Lambert started out to rescue her but failed.

Evans body was recovered and a squad of firemen, directed by Dr. Murray Fraser, M.O.H., worked over the bodies for some time but their efforts were unavailing.

The body of the girl was not located until sometime after.

Two Witness Fatality

The drowning was witnessed by Charles Carson, and Bob Runnett who were fishing from a boat on shore almost directly across the river from the scene of the tragedy.

"We saw them come down to the shore in their bathing suits and go into the water," Carson said. "The man was apparently teaching his companion to swim for some time and were talking and laughing as he held her up while she swam.

"Suddenly we noticed a commotion in the sounds from across the river and the girl's head went down. We never recognized a call for help.

"When we looked again there seemed to be standing up as if he were still in shallow water. Then their heads went up and they disappeared."

CLERK SHOOTS SWEETHEART
New York, Aug. 19—(AP)—Policeman Sweetheart Shoots Himself—A policeman priest as his side John Bellinger, 33 year old clerk entered a police station here today and confessed the slaying of his sweetheart.

BELLEVILLE BOYS ARE WELL TREATED BY TORONTO CLUB

Kid-Kars Left in Queen City to be on Exhibition

PROUD OF VICTORIES

Fresh from their conquests over the cream of Toronto kiddie car drivers, Ernest Young, Toronto champion and Barney Wright, runner-up both Belleville youngsters arrived in the city yesterday bringing glowing accounts of the treatment accorded them by the Toronto men of the Toronto Kiddie Car Derby which was run on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

Young, who won the junior championship on Tuesday defeated Barney Wright, another Belleville who won the laurels in his division, and then defeated the first little to Belleville, defeated the Yeomans Street youngster in the grand championship held on Wednesday afternoon.

Both defeated Toronto drivers, splendid sportsmen that they are, were loud in their praises of the treatment they had won their twin victories. Generously the Belleville boys offered their speedsters to several of the Toronto kids to drive, which was eagerly accepted by quite a few.

The speed of the Belleville-built cars astonished the Toronto kids, and one was heard to remark: "Those cars are for me. Those things runs too blamed fast." Yet Barney Wright on Bloor street and Avenue course in a Belleville car became too excited to apply his brakes and crashed into the inside line into a curb, damaging the car.

A Fine Gesture

Indicative of the fine treatment given the Belleville youngsters in the fine gesture made by the Dufferin Park Boys' Club, Director Jack Muddy and dirty, following Tuesday's race, the cars were stored in this garage for overnight storage.

The next morning when the boys called for their cars, they discovered they had washed, cleaned and polished. On the cars were "placed service or storage charges for these cars."

Following their successful invasion of the Queen City the youths were given a host of their wins and trophies and highly appreciative of the generous treatment afforded them by the Toronto boys, their host association, the Toronto Danforth Business Men's Club.

COON IS CAPTURED ON THURLOW FARM

Enjoying a corn patch on the farm of Arthur Keeler, second concession of Thurlow early last evening, a raccoon coon is now a captive in a colony house on the same farm. A dog owned by Mr. Keeler treed the coon in the corn patch and immediately gave chase. He treed the coon and Mr. Keeler pulled him from the tree and put him in the colony house. The raccoon has not long increased the coon's incentive to eat for up till this afternoon the animal had not taken food placed before him. The animal is in fine condition and not very old.

Approximately one mile will be resurfaced in this instance, an authoritative source revealed today. ### BOAT SEVERS CABLES BAY BRIDGE STALLS

Severed electrical cables through which power is provided for the operation of the bay bridge, caused when the large coal carrier, Coalfax, en route to Marion this morning, swung into the north channel of the bridge pier, stalled traffic at the south opening caused a half hour delay to the line of cars on the bridge road this morning before the bridge road could be closed by hand, and the efforts of several men.

At shortly after 12:30 noon, bridge officials again reported all clear, and the span again functioning.

PORCUPINE CAPTURED IN VICTORIA PARK

EFFORT TO MAKE COST REASONABLE SAYS CHAIRMAN

Ald. Thompson Points Out Disadvantages of Night Operations in Laying of Sidewalks — Refers to Complaints

"Merchants who have been complaining about the inconvenience caused them by the present construction of sections of sidewalk in front of their business places, should bear in mind that the department of public works is, after all, carrying out their expressed wishes to conduct this department and necessary work at as reasonable a cost as possible," stated Alderman Glen Thompson, chairman of that department, in outlining his stand on the matter.

"This work could be done at night time, after store hours, but there would be the added costs which would be considerable. There would have to be a system of floodlighting installed in order to illuminate the job and there would be other expenses. Besides this we would in all probability have had the residents of the downtown section up in arms through the noise occasioned by the work. They would not be able to sleep with a concrete mixer and steel wheelbarrows rattling during the night.

"We have tried to carry this repair work on with the minimum inconvenience and in as fast a manner as possible, work which is badly needed and will add considerably to the appearance of Front Street when it is completed," declared the alderman.

POLICE COURT

A transient who gave his name as Lional Blain, address Ottawa, was sentenced to serve ten days in the common jail after being convicted of trespassing upon the property of the Canadian National Railways. Blain appeared before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., this today's local police court and pleaded guilty to the charge.

Samuel Hoover, Malvern, Ont., was convicted of two charges preferred under the H.T.A., but sentence was deferred for one week at the request of Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C.

Hoover was charged with driving a less driving and the operation of a motor car without having obtained a driver's license. "He had no license and was driving his brother's car at the time of the accident," stated Provincial Constable Arthur Harman.

"I believe there was some damage resulting to another motor car, as the result of this accident, and would therefore ask for a week's enlargement in order that restitution may be made in the matter," prompted Crown Attorney Donnan. The suggestion was accepted by the court.

A number of citizens appeared charged with not having obtained their 1938 city dog licenses. All pleaded guilty.

"There seems to be an opinion about the city that pups do not require a dog license. Under the city bylaw all dogs come under the license assessment regardless as to whether they are two days or two years of age," openly stated Acting Chief Harman in warning.

Aubrey Westlake, 18, appeared charged with the theft of a quantity of apples. "How do you elect trial, before Magistrate or by judge, or by judge and jury?" asked Mr. Donnan.

"By judge and jury," replied the unadvised youth.

At this point, Jacob Goodman, local barrister, acting as the court "good samaritan," advanced and after consultation with the accused the latter changed his election to that of being tried summarily before the presiding court. A week's enlargement was later granted at the request of Mr. Goodman.

A seduction case held in camera, concluded the proceedings.

CHARGES PENDING AFTER CAR CRASH

Albert Lacroix, 36-year-old resident of Eastview, near Orillia, was rushed to Belleville General Hospital yesterday afternoon suffering from chest injuries and three fractured ribs, one of the latter penetrating a lung, as the result of a motor accident on No. 7 highway one mile east of Ardoch.

Lacroix, was accompanying his wife and three children in one of whom is blind, and the other a helpless victim of infantile paralysis to Orillia. Ont., where they were to be placed in an institution for treatment. The children, who were riding in the back seat of the car with their father were injured.

Following the accident, the children, aged 7, 8, Ruston, Children's Aid Superintendent, arranged for transportation for the remainder of their journey from here to Orillia. The Mayor of Eastview guaranteed payment of any expenses occurred for the children's return, according to Capt. Ruston.

Lacroix with his children were travelling in a Blue Seal Company taxicab westward from Eastview to Orillia along No. 7 highway, when Ronald Papineau, driver of the car, after rounding a sharp curve, collided a light truck travelling toward them on the wrong side of the road, according to a statement given by Papineau to Chief of Police Hayes. Tweed who investigated the accident.

Swung Into Vehicle

Attempting to avoid a collision, Papineau swung the car, in a futile effort to avoid being struck, but the truck driven by Frank Conger, Arden, crashed the taxicab amidships driving it into the south ditch.

Lacroix was treated at the scene of the accident by Dr. Whytock, Sharbot Lake. Claiming he was already late, and appearing anxious to get his frightened children away from the scene of the accident, and to Orillia, Lacroix insisted on continuing his journey.

Pain of his injuries proved too much, and he fainted away at Tweed, where he was summoned by Dr. Doyle of that village, who immediately ordered the injured man to hospital. Dr. Stobie, of this city, who attended him here stated, that he would be able to leave hospital tomorrow. Lacroix's children left with relatives in Orillia in the care of M. Jobbett, Arden resident.

Chief of Police Hayes stated that charges were pending against Conger. Both car and truck were considerably damaged.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 19.—(CP)—While trading at about the slowest pace of the summer stocks firmed in the early hours on the Toronto Stock exchange and the afternoon brought still livelier activity, prices, especially in the mining issues, and a quickening of the trading tempo.

Gold shares led the afternoon rally with Preston, MacLeod Cockshutt, Fast Malartic, and Hard Rock out in front. All the senior golds were higher. Base Metals moved up with Nickel and Waterous finishing. Waterous was up 5.80 to above a net rise of 50 cents.

National Steel Car stood out in the industrial list with a gain of about 3 points. Most of the steels were up while power groups were firm to strong. The western oil market remained sluggish.

STOCKWELL ST. CLOSE

New York, Aug. 19.—(AP)—Stocks pushed into a rally of fractions to around two points in today's late market dealings after a morning of indifferent shuffling over a somewhat ragged area.

Tire company issues held much of the forenoon's buying play but, in the fourth hour, rails steamed to the front along with motors, mail orders, coppers and specialties.

The Association of American Railroads would have an "important" announcement to make at Washington later in the day. Wall Street jumped at the conclusion this would be bullish.

Prominent on the move upward were shares of U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Westinghouse, Anaconda, Allis Chalmers and General Electric.

INSPIRING SCENE AT CEREMONIES OF BRIDGE OPENING

Impressive View of River And Crowds From Bridge Span

"You could have heard a pin drop. Everywhere, everyone stood, or sat silent. Only the hum of muffled radios in cars that relayed the speeches from the microphones near the speakers could be heard. It was one of the most impressive sights we ever witnessed as thousands of people on both sides of the river observed a grave-like silence as President Roosevelt and Prime Minister King spoke", Mr. James W. Haggerty County Treasurer, who with Messrs. Eric Denyes S. Sandercock and R. J. S. Dewar attended the ceremonies at the official opening of the International Bridge at Ivy Lea yesterday said today.

"I don't think I ever saw so many people in all my life", Mr. Haggerty chuckled this morning, as he told a graphic story of an event that went in the histories of two great nations. "There were people, and cars and cars and people everywhere, from Kingston east to Ivy Lea was a steady stream of vehicular traffic. People travelled in all sorts of queer conveyances to witness the event. Near Ivy Lea however traffic thinned out a bit, and we were able to park our car in a fairly good spot."

Black Masses of People

Everywhere one looked one could see black masses of people. They lined the roads and stood out like great black patches against the green of the surrounding hills. Cars were parked in a solid mass near the entrance to the bridge. They stood wheel to wheel in places, while people strove to place their vehicles to the best advantage."

Cars were allowed to traverse the Canadian span but were halted when they reached a spot approximately a quarter mile from the International Boundary proper. Here there people had to walk to where the historic ceremonies were taking place. The actual International boundary lies diagonally across the International Bridge. It was here that President Roosevelt and Premier King cut the ribbon that officially opened the splendid structure, Mr. Haggerty said.

"The view from the span that towers one hundred and twenty feet above the rivers of the St. Lawrence was awe-inspiring. Far in the distance the famous Canadian river, could be seen boats of all descriptions ploughing their way through the sun-glinted water. The green of the islands, specked with the white and colors of palatial residences of millionaires and wealthy appeared to be animate for people thronged to get a view of the magnificent scenic and natural every available spot."

Envy President His Hat

"The thing that captured our fancy was President Roosevelt's hat", smiled Mr. Haggerty. "I suppose it actually cost about fifty dollars but it seems to be the acme of comfort. The President jammed it on his head at an angle and was continually adjusting it. We tried to buy hats like it in Kingston, but had no luck."

The United States chief executive, stood up in his car smiling and bowing acknowledgment to the cheering thousands that lined the streets of Kingston as the presidential entourage passed through,' Mr. Haggerty stated. "He wore an infectious smile and was continually acknowledged the roars of acclaim that greeted him at every turn."

There were police everywhere. Khaki-clad officers, blue uniformed policemen and the gay scarlet of the Mounties were seen at every turn. "And I suppose there were hundreds of secret service men in the crowd that we knew nothing about," he said.

"I guess every newspaper photographer and motion picture cameraman in the world was there," the speaker continued. "Everywhere we turned we could see them taking their pictures or winding cameras. And it is safe to say that literally thousands of amateur photographers were on hand. It appeared that everyone around us had a camera."

U. S. President's Comment

Residents of the United States who flocked in their thousands by boat and auto to Kingston and Gananoque yesterday on the occasion of the International Bridge opening and the presidential visit were amazed at the reception and genuine whole-heartedness of enthusiasm given their own President Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

"Never have I seen a gathering so large. Never one with the enthusiasm and friendliness so unalloyed", one New York family commented to Mr. Stock. Stock, local city treasurer, one of scores of Belleville residents who had attended the history-breaking event.

The entire absence of any protection of the President through the form of a cordon of police at the presidential car was driven through the packed streets of Kingston, was also mentioned which was most commented upon by the American visitors, it was stated.

"They don't do it like that in the United States. There when the President is taken on a trip, he is surrounded by all sorts of armed protection," stated one American visitor.

Estimates of the crowd which attended the bridge opening as given by local residents who were present vary from a total of 75,000 to between 75,000 and 80,000 persons.

"It was one of the largest crowds ever to assemble on a single border occasion," stated Mr. J. O. Heritz, manager of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce who set the attendance at the larger figure.

VAST STOREHOUSE IS ADVOCATED

Storage of Foodstuffs And Raw Materials in Britain Urged

(By Guy E. Rhodes, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Cambridge, England, Aug. 19 — (CP)—Establishment in the United Kingdom of a vast storehouse for Candian wheat, other surplus Empire food stuffs and raw materials was suggested today by Professor John Maynard Keynes as protection against starvation in event of war.

In an address before the economics section of the British Association here for the advance of science, the Cambridge University economist, who is goods storage adviser to the government, estimated the United Kingdom could store £2,500,000,000 (roughly $2,500,000,000) worth of goods at an annual cost of about £20,000,000.

placing more people on our already overburdened relief lists; and endangering the very credit of the Dominion, the provinces and the municipalities.

Cabinet Cost Unknown

"No one has yet been able to estimate with any degree of accuracy the cost of this entire project but I do know, according to a memorandum submitted to me by Dr. Thomas Hogg, chairman of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, that under the old agreement Ontario was obligated to pay as its share a sum varying between $62,000,000 and $73,000,000 (not including the cost of interest).

"Irrespective of any propaganda or sonorous play that might be concocted by you, you may rest assured that this government will resist any effort to force us to expend public funds in such an unwarranted manner or to force upon the people of Ontario an additional burden of debt and taxation."

BOTH "CALLERS" RECEIVED TICKETS

An inadvertent error in The Ontario Intelligencer yesterday boomeranged profitably for one family, appearing in the McCarthy Theatre advertisement was a telephone number chosen at random from the directory. In another part of the edition another number appeared, that was supposed to be the same as the one in the ad.

Both families called the theatre, and the management, equal to the occasion, presented both "callers" with theatre tickets.

Dog Clerk Caught With Heavy Cartoon Leaving Store

Toronto, Aug. 19 (CP)—Arrest of Gordon Hall, 20-dog clerk temporarily employed by McClelan's Drug Store at 341 Yonge Street to discovery of about $1,000 worth of drugs in Hall's cottage at suburban Highland Creek, police reported today.

Hall was charged with stealing drugs from three drug stores where he had worked. He was arrested as he left the McClellan store, after being it up, laden down with a heavy carton.

Within a few weeks Hall intended being married and opening a drug store of his own, police said he told them.

PEACE AMONG NATIONS

Never perhaps in history has a bridge been made so great a symbol of the life and outlook of two nations of one hundred and thirty or forty millions of people as that bridge which was opened yesterday, the new Thousand Island bridge. This occurs at a time in world history when peace and threats to peace are so much in the public mind. Another link, it serves to bind two peoples together and it was upon the day of opening of the bridge that President Roosevelt, while at Kingston where he was honored with the degree of LL.D. by Queen's University, that just before going on to the afternoon's proceedings at the bridge Mr. Roosevelt gave the assurance that the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canada is threatened by any other empire."

Such words indicate the real unity of interest in the preservation of peace and may be taken as a warning to other nations who might desire to threaten domination.

This statement has gone around the world, creating reactions of the greatest importance. British people saw in Mr. Roosevelt's address on this occasion the proof that in the stress on peace between the United States and Canada Mr. Roosevelt had indicated his sincere desire to use the moral force of the United States for peace. In France it was seen as proof that the democracies of the world are standing together and also as a sign that the United States would actively support of Britain and France in world affairs. Other democracies received the words of the President with enthusiasm on the utterance on peace. In the United States the remarks were taken as indicating extension of the Monroe Doctrine to include Canada. In Canada the speech was taken as that of a sincere friend, representing a nation, one of the greatest of the world nations, and a sign of cooperation and good will.

The assurance and promise of U. S. cooperation to repel any threat "at domination of Canada by any other empire," indicate to Canadians how precious is their liberty and also the wisdom and preparedness to defend in this peculiar time in history. As Ottawa reaction to the speech indicated the observations of President Roosevelt would not cause Canadian defence preparations to slacken.

The theme of peaceful cooperation underlying the address is something the people of the United States and Canada have felt for years. The reference to this peace was natural and was far-reaching because of the fears of threats to peace elsewhere. Prime Minister King stressed the happy relations of the two lands as natural.

The eyes of the world were yesterday on that stream, the mighty St. Lawrence, once the scene of conflicts, and a great part of that world earnestly yearns for such relations as exist here in the New World, though other nations may wonder how that bridge can bear such import as was placed upon it.

Yet Europe needs such bridges badly, Asia needs them, bridges where there is, in the words of the President of the United States, no countersign needed and where the only word must be "Pass, Friend."

Totalitarian states may look upon such peace and such unguarded bridges as the very recklessness of democracy but two nations in North America know that these have meant a century and a quarter of peace.

BRIDGES

The conception of the word "bridge" used by so many speakers at the ceremony of opening of the new Thousand Island Bridge is food for thought for the thousands who heard the speeches and the millions who listened in on the ceremonies. One thinks of a bridge as a link of peace, not a pontoon to invade an enemy's country. The thought was driven home that there are many bridges to be built, material bridges, social bridges, economic bridges, international bridges across the yawning abysses of fear, doubt, insecurity and selfishness.

In thinking of the scene near Ivy Lea yesterday the mind recalls the story of a scene on the river Tiber, Italy, in the year 507 B.C. according to Roman history when an enemy attacked Rome led by Lars Porsena. It looked as if Rome were doomed But Horatius Cocles with two companions held back the enemy while the bridge supports were being chopped away. Horatius sent his companions back to the Roman bank and fought until the bridge was about to fall. Then he plunged into the Tiber and reached the friendly shore where he was welcomed and honored. There the bridge was a trade route, but [illegible] So it had to be cut down. Bridges are destroyed in modern war.

But the new Thousand Island Bridge is a link, a highway, not a pontoon nor the portcullis of an old castle. At it yesterday stood the two chief men of two neighboring nations dedicating the structure to the continuance of peace and goodwill. President Roosevelt and Prime Minister King were the representative of that powerful pair of nations along the border. Never will a modern Horatius and his friends have to fight for that bridge, for on both sides dwell people in peace.

OPEN HOUSE

The rain goes searching lock and door
For a dry spot to rest its feet;
The wind is in without a knock,
And out, and down the street.

By every real and random door
When wind is gone, and rain's done,
By every pane and every pore
Comes tonight in the sun.

And stars let down on spider thread
Between the rafters where he lies;
The moon starts up about his head
And flutters to the skies.

The cricket sings upon its knees,
The ant climbs up and up and in,
And secretly the mouse sees
If welcome's crust be thin.

RAG WEED IN LARGE QUANTITIES is reported from the Bay Bridge approaches, and folks who suffer from hay fever think something should be done about it. One Sidelight reader, who has a penchant for hay fever, says the ragged enemy is laying in wait for the unwary, in strength, at the Bay Bridge, and unless defeated and destroyed spells trouble for many innocent passers-by. Conservation looks like the Ontario Government Public Works or Marine Departments should get busy pronto.

INVASION OF CRICKETS IN DROVES WITH FULL WAR PAINT has caused considerable uneasiness among businessmen and householders, for the insects have arrived in force and seem bent on going to town. However, the horde is followed by their bitterest enemy, the Praying Mantis, who feed voraciously on the crickets. In turn the praying mantis is a choice morsel for the sparrows who keep a weather eye out for these insects and frequently make a kill. A business man discovering a praying mantis inside his place of business recently picked it up and took it to the door. Throwing it in the air he said "Go over to Prince Edward County and eat grasshoppers and crickets." However, the insect did not get that far. Before it had time to orient itself a sparrow had swooped and driven it to the ground, pouncing on it immediately — and that Praying Mantis has said its last prayer.

MANY REPORTS OF "SUNSTROKE", near or actual, have been received, attributed to the extended hot weather. Folks who persist in remaining in the sun with or without a hat need not be surprised to entertain by dizziness and all the discomfort of too much heat applied to the dynamo which keeps the human machinery in motion. Folks who live in hot countries like India are very careful not to expose their heads to the intense heat, which means sure death, and folks have sense enough to take a siesta during the hottest part of the day in the tropics. Course in Canada we are not accustomed to weather extremes and may be caught napping occasionally.

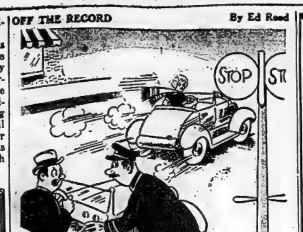
Folks who prate about "personal freedom" should be interested in the following adv. which appeared in a Missouri newspaper:



Come to Altamont, where you can have a good time. You can fight, get drunk, scream, panhandle, jump the rope and drive your old cars as fast as you want to and where you want. Our little old town has no peace officers nor a calaboose and, come down to brass tacks, has few good law-abiding citizens.

HOT SPELL IS AGGRAVATED BY FOLKS who will insist upon commenting upon the weather. Not for a moment can we get away from the dreadful heat of conversation about the weather. If we could forget, for a few moments the extravagances of the weather we might kid ourselves into a condition as "cool as a cucumber." However, it can't last, nothing ever does.

Early Treatment of Cancer of the Stomach Saves Many Lives.

"The first symptoms to be noticed in the great majority of cases are an unsettled discomfort after meals, and an unaccountable loss of appetite. The patient is usually of the cancer age (40 to 70) and has never suffered with indigestion before. With the failure of appetite there is a steady loss of weight and, as a rule, a progressive development of anaemia (thin blood)".

I am quoting a description of stomach cancer by Dr. John Morley, Manchester, in the British Medical Journal.

It is this insidious (silken) onset of cancer—just a lack of appetite, a little stomach discomfort, and loss of weight from not eating enough food—that makes cancer of the stomach such a distressing and at times hopeless disease.

By the time the other signs of cancer appear it is often too late to save life.

The other signs or symptoms present are severe pain, vacant expression in face, sunken features, general loss of weight, skin pale, dry and sallow, blood in the stools, vomiting, and, in the majority of cases, an irregular mass of tissue felt over the stomach region. Thus when the early symptoms—loss of appetite, dull pain and loss of weight—appear physicians now have the stomach contents examined after a test meal, because, in stomach cancer there is an absence of free hydrochloric acid. In addition, an Xray of the stomach is taken after giving some barium sulphate which gives a black shadow and shows up any break in the lining of the stomach.

An analysis of the stomach contents and the Xray examination together with the three early symptoms mentioned above—loss of appetite, distress after food, and loss of weight—enables the physician to discover cancer early. Further, the fact that the patient is past forty year of age is another point about cancer of the stomach.

Early operation of stomach cancer gives many cures; late discovery is always fatal. Now that the stomach is known to be almost the commonest seat of cancer in man, the above points should be kept in mind.

ACCIDENTAL FALL FROM TRAIN IS JURY'S VERDICT

Adjourned Inquest For Sergt. W. H. Burkholder Completed

NO VIOLENCE

Sergeant H. W. Burkholder, Hamilton, late of the 11th Battery C.F.A. died from injuries received, when he accidentally fell from a Canadian Pacific Railway train four miles west of Belleville on or about July 23rd, 1938, a jury empanelled to probe into the circumstances of his death decided last night at the adjourned inquest held here under Chief Coroner Dr. J. J. Robertson.

Evidence of several witnesses, that included members of the crew of the troop-train C.P.R. engineer, the deceased's fellow-sergeants and non-commissioned officers, investigating Provincial-Police Constable H. Briden and Dr. H. M. Anderson was heard by the jury, who retired for thirty minutes before bringing in a verdict of accidental death.

Statements of upward of eighty members of the battery were available but were not read in the evidence. The inquest was conducted by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, with Sergeant Snook, Belleville Police Department assisting.

Found Near Tracks

The body of Burkholder was discovered approximately 350 feet west of the Cemetery Crossing on the north side of the C.P.R. tracks. Constable McBrien told the jury in his evidence. A few feet west of the body a mark was found, where it appeared a body had fallen. It had skidded into the ditch after striking the bank, the officer stated. A deep cut was apparent on the head, while several lacerations were found on the leg between the knee and the thigh, evidence brought obt. A pool of congealed blood was apparent on the left side of the stomach. Beneath the body and in the cuts were pieces of glass believed to be broken remnants of a whisky bottle, witness stated. Other pieces of blood stained glass were found near the body.

No Violence Indicated

"Was there anything to indicate violence?" Crown Attorney Donnan questioned. "No" replied the witness.

Torn blood stained breeches worn by the deceased at the time of the accident were introduced in evidence by Mr. Donnan. Witness agreed with the Crown's picture of the facts, that the deceased obviously drinking, had eaten and became sick, had leaned out of a window for relief and had apparently fell. "Any other explanation than this occur to you," witness was asked.

"He could have been shoved," was the reply.

Dr. R. M. Anderson read a letter from Dr. Jocelyn Rogers, provincial analyst to the effect that the blood content of Burkholder was two and two-tenths per alcohol in 1,000 parts blood. This analysis was made forty hours after the accident occurred and did not allow for assimilation by tissues, and evaporation.

"Two point-five alcohol content indicates complete intoxication," Dr. Anderson told the jury.

Crown Attorney Donnan: "Could a man in this condition get out a window and fall out?"

Dr. Anderson: "It could be easily done."

Train Crew Testifies

Conductor J. J. Johnson, Trainman R. Britton and Brakeman F. C. Owens, members of the crew of the troop train on which Burkholder was riding, testified that while the troops were in jolly spirits they were not disorderly, nor was there any evidence of fighting, or any indication of malicious assault. Conductor Johnson told the jury, that he felt sure every vestibule door was closed. The tailgate of the train was closed, when it left Trenton and was the same when it arrived at Smith's Falls. Brakesman Owens testified.

C.P.R. Locomotive Fireman J. D. Morrison, Chalk River, near Petawawa stated that eighteen broken windows in the coaches were apparent when he examined the train at Chalk River. Several windows in the coach in which Burkholder rode were open, he told the jury.

Battery Sergeant Major W. J. Snider, Hamilton and other sergeants testified that Burkholder was "alright" when they left Hamilton. They had last seen him shortly after midnight east of Toronto, when they had partaken of a lunch together. He was very popular, and had no enemies in the battery, witnesses stated. He had not been missed until morning when someone noticed his tunic hanging on a hook in the car. He agreed with the Crown, that troops sometimes secret liquor in that part of their breeches between knee and thigh.

Deceased Nearsighted

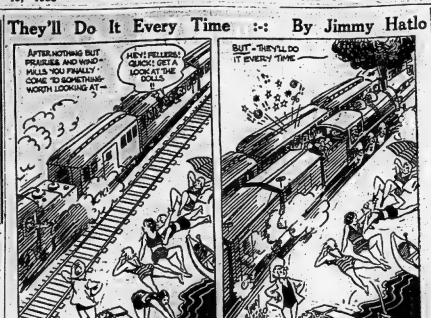
"Was Burkholder nearsighted," Coroner Robertson interjected at this point, addressing Sergeant Major Snider. "I don't know but I know his eyesight was bad. He wore glasses occasionally," was the reply.



"Judging from these glasses," the Coroner said examining Burkholder's spectacles found near the body, "he had very bad sight and could have easily stumbled through an open door."

Sergeant Russell Dawson had met Burkholder at lunch, and he had not been intoxicated. Witness testified however, that the deceased had liquor in his baggage.

D. T. Collum, C.P.R. Station Agent at Petawawa, told the jury that he had discovered twenty or twenty-one windows broken during his inspection of the train after its arrival at Petawawa. Four or five windows were broken out completely but he could find no evidence that would indicate that any person had fallen or been pushed out of any of the windows.

Evidence concluded. The jury that included Tibbedi, Reynolds and Messrs. J. Canning, James Scott, G. Smith, William Sharland, F. E. Turney and George Fralick, filed out of the courtroom to bring in their verdict some thirty minutes later.

British reserve officers were warned last week they had to have special certificates to avoid "trouble" if they go to Germany, which forbids foreign soldiers to travel over certain border areas.

Mr. Mackenzie King, delivering his bridge dedication address four hours later, altered the prepared text to voice grateful appreciation of the President's assurance.

Appreciation From Canada

"May I express at once on behalf of all Canadians appreciation of the address delivered by President Roosevelt at Queen's University this morning," the Prime Minister said. "It will meet with a warm response in the hearts of all lovers of justice, liberty and peace."

The President's address was the last feature of the bridge dedication ceremony and Mr. Mackenzie King had no opportunity in his address of commenting on the appeal for co-operation in completion of the St. Lawrence seaway project.

Interviewed later the Prime Minister said he would not comment other than to say how much he appreciated what the President had said.

The Opening

Promptly at three o'clock and the traditional ceremony of severing the colored band was performed jointly by the two leaders.

The international boundary passes along what is known as "the Rift" separating Hill Island from Wellesley Island. The latter is United States territory. Only a 90 foot concrete bridge was necessary at this point.

This part of the ceremony completed the official party proceeded to a covered stage set up in a natural amphytheatre on Wellesley Island where the speeches were delivered.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies President Roosevelt drove to Clayton, N.Y., where his private train was waiting to take him to his New York home in Hyde Park. Mr. Mackenzie King returned to Brockville where his private car took him to Barrie where he spends today with his sister.

Ottawa, Aug. 19 (CP)—Unofficial comment in Ottawa on President Roosevelt's interpretation of United States attitude toward Canada's safety from invasion expressed yesterday at Kingston was definitely indicative of the belief his assurance should not be allowed to delay by one minute the Dominion's own efforts toward preparations for defence.

Possibility of greater co-operation between the two countries in defence measures was seen here, involving possibly the construction of the often mooted highway through British Columbia connecting United States with her Alaskan Peninsula.

There was also the possibility raised that the President's remarks might tend to hasten at least favorably influence the negotiations now proceeding in Washington for a new trade agreement between United States and the United Kingdom, and for a revised trade agreement with Canada.

Modernization of Defences

In the past 18 months Canada has sped up the modernization of her defences. The non-permanent militia has been reorganized. Much mechanization has been carried out. Canadian factories and workers are being prepared for production of machine guns and other war implements.

Speculation arose as to the distance United States would go if Canada were involved in war because of her affiliation with the British Empire. It was the assumption, however, that President Roosevelt was referring only to actual invasion, or threatened invasion, by a foreign power. Interpretation of Monroe Doctrine

Generally the President's words were taken as a new interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine, hitherto understood to apply only to the American countries south of the border.

The Monroe Doctrine, in brief, pledges the United States to the attitude that any act of aggression against an American country will be considered an act of war against the United States.

It is considered possible Mr. Mackenzie King will make some reference to the President's statement when he addresses a Liberal party picnic at Woodbridge, near Toronto, Saturday afternoon.

Train Child Early to Be Host

Art of Old-Fashioned Hospitality is Fine Character Builder

(By LISA ORENELLE)

Whenever an adult guest arrived at the Brown home, or even a child, Alice and George gave little thought, went on with their play —that is, of course, if their play held interest Alice and George felt no responsibility for visitors, invited or unlimited.

In the first place no one, certainly not Mother, had ever suggested that they should. Perhaps Alice at five and George, at seven were too young for the fine story duties of host and hostess.

But no that was not exactly the case in the Brown household, at least not altogether. The lack of politeness lowered grade you might suppose was inherited if you had observed Mr. or Mrs. Brown on such occasions.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown were not at all hospitable—far from it. It wasn't in their code of hospitality to be at the door to greet visitors when they arrived and they never went out of their way to see that a guest was comfortable. Persons who came to the house was treated alike, without attention or seeming many. You'd wonder they ever had any guests, wouldn't you?

It never liked a host as made over me," Mrs. Brown said, and so she seldom played the host in her own house without greeting or comment, giving them the privilege and the responsibility of being entertained at home. No guest of the Browns was ever entertained, the feeling made to feel in the limelight. So Alice and George and Alice went right on with what they were doing, regardless. So did Father.

Guests Adjusted Selves

And the guests except for the sensitive, feeling one, whom, because no one came to greet them or stopped to chat with them supposed that possibly they might not be welcome or at least would never be missed, adjusted themselves as best they could.

But we are not really concerned with the discomfort of the guests, or of the extraordinary lack of manners of some young married people. We are concerned with the effect of such a disregard, neglect, hostility or lack of training—upon the children, Alice and George.

Good manners grow, after all, just a pretty show. They are an expression which are or not conscious, of consideration, of sacrifice of self for the comfort and pleasure of another. It is the first lesson in unselfishness.

Character Builder

Old-fashioned hospitality is the best character builder we have found. What could do more to draw a child away from extreme self-centerism and self-consciousness than to make him responsible for the comfort and pleasure of a guest? But it is certain that no child is likely to fall into such habits without the example of courteous and kind hospitable parents.

At first Jimmie could go with Mother to greet the guest. At three Janie should learn to enjoy passing pleasantries and silences. At four, Jimmie could form the habit of opening doors and assisting with coats. Children like to be hosts if you let them. They like to make a fuss over a guest. The visitor then becomes more exciting.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

What Kind of Guest Are You?

What kind of guest does the hostess enjoy entertaining in her home? The perfect guest arrives when she is expected to arrive. She brings with her all the equipment necessary for her visit, the choice of appropriate clothes all necessary toilet articles, compliments for her favorite sports. No household enjoys a borrower, she doesn't forget her luggage is some thoughtful gift for the hostess or something for the household, and there are children in the family, some toy or trinket to delight each child.

You as a Guest

Complete and gracious co-operation with everything planned by your watchword as a guest. Be interested in everything, be interested in general participation in social plans that are made for you. Always be well and appropriately dressed meticulously groomed so that your appearance adds one less thing for you to be friends. In your manner and your words show your appreciation of everything that is suggested to give you pleasure.

Don't ever fail to have every minute or every hour of every day planned for you. Don't be disappointed to the family routine leaving your hostess time for her household duties or for anything else she has to do. Be alert to sense when it would be convenient for your hostess to be relieved for you absented yourself, to read or to wander in the garden or to sit on the terrace, or to go to your room to rest or write letters.

Be a neat and tidy guest. Even if you are constantly a most untidy person don't drive your hostess to despair the way you do your own family. Keep your room in perfect order keep the bathroom in perfect order, and when you have done leave anything behind which your hostess must forward to you.

Don't Offer Advice

Another important rule: Watch what you say. Family discussions are not for you. . . . don't offer advice or information as to their solution. Don't make comparisons between your home and theirs. Children like to be hosts if you let them. They like to make a fuss over a guest. The visitor then becomes more exciting.

Don't in even the tiniest way criticize your hostess' friends, or put into religious or political controversies with them Don't give all your charming attention to a clever or distinguished guest, a personage, and disregard a shy guest. Don't ostentatiously concentrate your glamour on your host . . . this has also too often had tragic matrimonial consequences!

The lowest form of guest is the disloyal guest, the one who, having accepted hospitality, tells of some unpleasant thing that happened during the visit, indulges in unkind tale-bearing.

The considerate guest in a seventies household offers to assist with the work. If the hostess refuses the offer there are still many ways in which the guest can co-operate by making a minimum of extra work.

Don't forget the bread-and-butter letter that you should write to your hostess within a day or two after you have arrived home. It is generous to send a small gift to the hostess or for the household, whether or not you brought one when you were.

Retiring

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When one is visiting, who should suggest retiring, the hostess or the guest. I'm never quite sure of this. Will you tell me?

A. L. P.

The visitor is the one who has the privilege of suggesting when she or he wishes to retire for the night. This obviously makes it easier for the hostess, especially if the visitor has the social grace to sense just the right time. However, if a hostess sees that her guest is uncertain about having this privilege, she may properly say, "I realize that you have had a long, tiring journey, and that you must be tired. I don't hesitate to tell us if you would like to go to bed early"; or "We're just up-late-ers, but we know that you've had a hard week and the hot city do you name the hour you wish to go to bed. My golf game is scheduled for nine, you know."

If, on the other hand, you think you are being thoughtful in making an early-to-bed suggestion, and this suggestion is vetoed by your hostess, you will have to have your sense of humor in trying to determine how seriously to take the veto. Life holds these little problems.

But he's always quoting his mother and telling stories about what she did and said and that sort of thing, until I'm tired of it. I'm not precisely what you'd call a Dutch Dora. And I suppose I am jealous. How can I make him quit?

Second Fiddle Daughter-in-law.

Don't make him stop. Isn't it a great deal better that he should admire his mother than some other woman who probably vamp him?

The love that a man has for his wife and for his mother, are such different emotions, that it's a dunce than foolish for either to harbor jealousy.

Engagement Broken Wants to Keep Ring

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We were engaged for two years. During that time he paid regularly on a splendid diamond ring. Last Christmas the payments were finished and the ring was really mine, and then for some reason I never could understand we started quarrelling, and we disagreed over everything. Sometimes we wouldn't speak for a week, and I would have broken with him but I hated to give up my ring.

Finally, we did break up, and while he has never asked for the ring I've understood that he expected me to return it. But, way couldn't I keep it as a souvenir of the day when we were really happy together. Besides he hasn't asked have it back, and I've heard in a roundabout way, coming through his sister that he expected it. Do you think it would be all right for me to keep it?

S.

It's very bad taste for a girl to keep a ring after an engagement has been broken, whether she ex-fiance demands their return or not. I'm glad your heart doesn't seem to be involved in the matter, for you'd have to think more of the ring than you do of the young man.

"Lucky you don't have to go through the post office!" Clem ejaculated, chin out, hands in his pockets.

Ethel, his cousin, giggled and came back: "Jealous, aren't you? Are you the Fount of All Wisdom?"

"If you'd came by that way," Clem began magisterially, "you'd a-been marked 'Fraudulent'. You never can tell, you know—you say a word you mean."

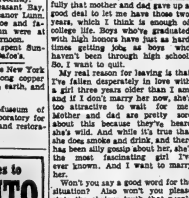
"Decoded: Unnecessarily wicked! To the scandal of my fine family—which always sticks to the straight-and-narrow—and in horse trades," Ethel retorted.

"Well, I'm glad you do. You'll fair be the death o' me I don't watch out! I'll be dreaming about you some day cavesdropped, and heard me jollyin' Dave Doon about bein' so good to Grandma, and he'll hold you before he came he was ugly enough to shoot Dave with the burn in it. "That was just one thing!!" St. Clement's daughter.

Ethel shook her head at him admiring demurely: "Now where is your halo, Clem? You have to have your kin—first cousin three times removed—to see it, and you're not even related. Fact I—I wrote some poetry to you."

"Fe, fie on you! ain't you shamed?" Ethel burst in. "When bit of harm!"

"Ethel Hunt! You—you—made me made me love you—and I didn't want to!" Clem all but wailed.



Ethel spread the good very straight, her eyes flashing, and asked with ironical gravity: "And why was that?"

"Oh, because Granny will pay marry Jimmy Baxter. Granny will have it so—she wants Jimmy to have it. Granny's will is final, much—until—until you came. Now —well, I guess what will be dead-seein' you playin' fast-and-loose with all those other fellows—and I don't want to have fun of me by them, as you make fun of them to me."

Ethel had felt a nascent thrill in Clem's dumb devotion, spoiled by that he was; he was also disgustingly good to look at. Granny, plus Granny's money, and Granny had made him fully sensible of the fact. Clem, unconscious of his appeal, of course, inherit the London forums always provided a fine subject for his possessor. Jimmy Baxter, her godchild, also grandchild to the closest friend of her mother's, was wrong.

Ethel played with him daintily, unaware of the danger until the afternoon when he came upon her fast in a tall fellow's arms. A stranger, rather pompous with a touch of gray in the temples, and lines of dissipation about the eyes and mouth. He held Ethel tight, and so high that her feet were clear of the floor, caught her by the throat and tried to throttle him. His eyes were like coals in a corpse's sockets. The clutching fingers crushed like a dead'y claw! Ethel did not shriek nor tremble: instead, she caught Clem's wrists, saying, "Quick, the deadly gun! Shoot at once! Or—I shall kill you!"

Somehow she freed — hands—the stranger's arms had fallen flaccid at his sides. How or whether she had even kept her word, nobody can say, for just then granny

Balanced Diet and Massages Help to Check Falling Hair

(By HELEN POLLETT)

Falling hair may be due to sluggish circulation, to the scalp or to one of many other causes. The "brain mat" seems to have a sympathetic nature; it feels sorry when other parts of the body are under strain and goes to pieces. Shafts fall and lose luster and the growth thins at the temples.

Too much worry, overwork all have a depressing effect upon tresses. Also nervousness and bad influence. Moistening the hair every day causes the shafts to lose lifeless.

A balanced diet will do much to keep hair healthy and glossy. Lean meat and iron are required for its well being. These food elements are supplied by vegetables, milk, meat, eggs, fruits and cereals which should be included in the diet.

All hair specialists emphasize the need of scalp massage to raise the blood streams upon which the silky threads live and thrive. Spread out fingers and thumbs, lift the flesh, give it a drubbing and manipulation from the nape to one neck. After the massage do your hundred strokes with a brush. The correct brush is a narrow oval with firm bristles. Hold up the hair, strand by strand, and use the brush with a

Theatres

AT THE McCARTHY

"RACKETEERS IN EXILE"

George Bancroft, in one vivid and sweeping portrayal, the fugitive public enemy in Columbia's "Racketeers in Exile" at the McCarthy theatre re-establishes himself as the outstanding character actor. Audiences at both the matinee and evening performances again saw the Bancroft who gave a sock-word performance in "Docks of New York"—a striking, dynamic figure lifted boldly from the page.

The story appears as "Big Bill" Weldin, an overlord of the racket world, who, beneath that exterior, is a simple appealing fellow. Weldin, when he is driven from the country he has made to a small town, the name escaping me spends his time and held in esteem as son of the local minister. Along goes Babe the cyclone, and the fun starts as the unspoken affection played by Wynne Gibson.

The racketeer is asked to speak at a church social. Carried away by his own eloquence he brings the crowd to its feet. Elated he realizes he has something to live for and where he will be perfectly safe. He becomes a fake evangelist.

Meanwhile, the city minister up his front of respectability, he induces Gordon Thornton, the unctuous organist to join his group. This character portrayed by Evelyn Brent helps create an unusual love angle with Bancroft centred between two entirely different types of women.

By now his rising power has attracted the attention of the head of the racket. Also a rival gang, but both of their opponent too strong to attack.

At this point Bancroft's character undergoes a change. Love, the anguish and disgusted with his inability to keep his reform-only to precipitate his life and the others into new situations.

Bancroft's role is for strongest he has ever played and its vital undercurrent of religious emotion gives him a new appeal that is sure to satisfy every patron attending the theatre.

Praise is due Wynne Gibson and Evelyn Knapik for their fine characterizations as well as Marc Lawrence, Garry Owens, John Gallaudet and Andrew Tombes. Vernon and George McKay contribute much to the picture's success.

Added treats presented with "Racketeers in Exile" are outstanding in every respect of the word "entertainment" and add a very pleasing hour's or two's enjoyment spent at the McCarthy theatre. Andy Clyde is featured in his latest hilarious comedy gambol "Strikes Away" an excellent clever all technicolor cartoon and all-star cast entitled "The Foolish Bunny". A Kiddie Musical Revue" that presents specialty acts unrivalled by any talented group of specialty acts entitled "Stardust" and a variety of other outstanding mart presenting high-flying swimming and sure-footed riding that makes a very interesting and well-worth-seeing sport reel.

AT THE BELLE

"The Crowd Roars"

Robert Taylor plays his first PAIRED ROLL IN SOME SUBSTANTIAL STARS' SOLOS-packed story of the modern prize ring coming to the Belle Theatre.

Maureen O'Sullivan, who played opposite the star in "A Yank At Oxford" is once again cast as Taylor's leading lady in the picture and an exceptional cast of prominent screen players including Edward Arnold as a racketeer, Frank Morgan as Taylor's father, an ex-champion, Wallace Ford, William Gargan, Lionel Stander and Jane Wyman.

Based on a story by George Bruce, author of "Navy Blue and Gold", the picture reveals behind the-scene activities of the boxing game, with Taylor as a pawn in the shady manipulations of a gambling syndicate.

"The Crowd Roars" offers Taylor in the hardest-hitting role of his career, playing Joe Kenny, the boy from the wrong side of the tracks, who fights his way up from the gutter to a place in the light-heavyweight championship.

Three years ago Joe finds a battle with racketeers more serious than his dreams for the title.

A very interesting and unusual Fete Smith oddity, "Funny Party" is also a part of the program. Another amusing Captain and the Kids Cartoon will be presented on the same program.

"The Shopworn Angel"

Margaret Sullavan makes her debut as a singing star in "The Shopworn Angel", the picture featuring James Stewart and Walter Pidgen at the Belle, with Melvyn Douglas and Florence Rice in the romantic mystery comedy, "Fan Company."

Goodnight Stories

By MAX TRELL

AS SOON as the lights were out, Knarf, the shadow boy, gave a sharp tug with his feet and snapped himself away from the footsteps of the little boy he belonged to.

Knarf slipped through the house, in the playroom he found Hanid, the shadow girl, getting ready to take a nap in the corner of the ceiling.

"Come down!" he called to her. "We have an important errand to do tonight."

"What important errand?" Hanid asked sleepily.

"Don't you remember? We promised to go to the garden and tell the Mole family not to build any more of their tunnels under the lawn."

"I don't remember that at all. Please go away and let me sleep."

"Oh, you have to come with me. And there's something else we must tell them, too. We must tell them that unless they stop building their tunnels under the lawn, Father is going to get a trap for them. We mustn't forget to tell them about the trap. Well, are you coming down?"

Make Her Get Up

Hanid didn't answer.

"Oh, so you've fallen asleep again! I'll wake you up!"

With that Knarf slid up the side of the wall (shadows can do that trick with less trouble than you can slide off a log) and grabbed her around the waist.

"Ouch! . . . I'll be right down! And she did come down.

"Well!" said Hanid impatiently, "where do those moles live?"

"In the garden, of course . . . I mean, under the garden. All we have to do now is find the entrance to their tunnel. That shouldn't take long."

Hanid gazed around the dark garden. She could see the hedge, and the wall, and the rose bush, and the pansy bed, and the holly-hocks . . . But she couldn't see the least sign of a tunnel!

Serious Eye Ailment Is Glaucoma

Regular Check-ups on Vision Best Way to Combat Disturbance

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

OF THE EYE conditions which impair sight in middle age, glaucoma is the most insidious, and for that reason, if no other, the most dangerous. It is not as common as cataract, but not as easy to recognize, either.

The eyeball is a tough sac which would collapse if it were not filled and kept round by a fluid which is abstracted from the blood. This fluid is transparent and not only makes sight possible, but carries nourishment to parts of the eye which have no circulation of their own, and then flows off through a physiological filler or valve. This keeps the eyeball at the right tightness or tension of the eyeball. In glaucoma, the filler or valve fails to work, the fluid is retained inside the eyeball, raising the pressure. The sac is stretched, the increased pressure injures the delicate structures, with consequent loss of vision proportionate to the amount of pressure and the promptness of treatment.

This tension may be suddenly increased, resulting in acute glaucoma. The symptoms of this are so severe and protesting that they evidently call for immediate medical examination, and relief usually can be obtained before damage is done. The symptoms are pain, headache, the appearance of rainbows around lights, and a terrifying reduction in vision.

Chronic Form Gradual

The chronic form is far commoner and is so gradual and insidious in its onset that much damage may occur before an oculist can be consulted. The lesion usually affects those portions of the retina where peripheral vision is needed, so that the first symptoms may be gradual diminution of vision on the outside rim of the visual field. The centre of vision may be quite clear but the sides dim. Other visual changes are the occurrence of rings of color, rainbow-like around objects, particularly bright objects—lights and mirrors.

Those patients are often unfortunately told that they have a beginning cataract, and are advised by some neighbor to sit down until it ripens. That is valuable time is lost, when they should be under the treatment of an oculist.

The purpose of the recitation of symptoms is not to frighten anyone or cause undue preoccupation with the vision, but to emphasize the desirability, especially after the age of 40, of regular checkups by your oculist.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

H. H.: "Some time ago I saw a notice that some factories were using their dressing rooms as disposed of salt and dextrose to prevent heat prostration. Could you please give me an address where I could get these pellets?"

Answer: Salt and water are given to prevent heat prostration on the theory that heat causes a loss of these substances through the perspiration. It is not necessary to give salt in addition to the special formula. Just plain table salt is all that is used. The amount taken is proportional to the amount of sweating.

Manicure Sets a Necessity For Well Groomed Nails

By JULIET SHELBY
Central Press Canadian Writer

Have you a manicure set? You really need one you know. You have your files and other little things but it is so much better to have the whole equipment and a definite place for everything. We may have the weekly manicure in the beauty salon but everyone knows how hangnails and rough edges have a way of showing up to say nothing of the ruined polish from the too lavish use of toilet water.

New Sets

The large manufacturers now have made it possible, with amazing variety and range of prices, for every little school girl to own her own individual set. There are tiny 5¢ cent boxes with the emery boards, orange wood sticks, polish remover and polish. They do not, however, contain the scissors or steel implements or any variety of polish, creams and good lotions are one finds in the luxurious cases, but are nice for overnight trips or to keep in the desk or locker.

They Last

We are convinced there is real economy in buying a fairly good set, as the fine steel in the better ones will last for years and only the polish, files, emery boards, cleansing creams and little cotton rolls need be replaced. Keep this in mind when you are shopping for a nice gift. Also, when the college wardrobe is being assembled, it will be such a satisfaction to have a complete toilet outfit when away from home. If the budget seems a bit strained, get one of the small ones and suggest to mother that the better one will be nice for one of your christmas gifts.

Use Polish

When renewing the polish never do it by patching up the marred places. You will have to remove every bit of polish first and then brush on the same color.

Some of the smart fall shades are tokay, ruby, carmen, tulip, mauve, sand, chinese, ceylon, men, rust, clover, poppy and others.

To Look Beautiful!

Woman Who So Strives Will Select Picture Gown or Robe de Style

Above Jessica Dragonette poses in a dress of black chiffon over a foundation of moire taffeta.

By ALICE ALDEN

The picture gown or robe de style continues to be the choice of the woman who likes to look beautiful instead of striking or smart. Consequently, it is the choice of the actress, the singer and others in the public eye. The evening frock with slim bodice and full skirt is an ideal fashion for the slim; it is always in fashion. So if you are particularly keen on choosing something that is the very latest, keep in mind the charms of frocks of the type shown here.

Jessica Dragonette, famous on the air waves, chose the frock, above, for a concert appearance. It is of black chiffon over a foundation of moire taffeta, cut in high-waisted, full-skirted fashion. The half sleeves combine chiffon and moire. A cluster of ivolets in the hair holds a misty, face-framing fold of tulle. The muff is of violets.

Lily Pons posed especially for this page in one of the gowns she took with her to South America. It is an advance model of white satin, with a dramatic hoop skirt. The soft skirt has another stream of multi-colored ribbons to emphasize the shining whiteness of the gown. A clump of white flowers in her hair and a muff of ribbons to match the frock are other touches.

(Reg. U. S. Pat. Office)

Respectful Politeness Is Best Cure Daughter-in-Law Can Administer To Meddlesome Mother-in-Law

(Copyright, 1938 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

DEAR MISS CHATFIELD:

We have a meddlesome mother-in-law woo is about to break up two homes as she broke up her own. She was divorced from her husband twenty-five years ago and although she is able-bodied she hasn't worked a lick in that time; says her sons owe her a living because she brought them up. It would be all right if she only asked a living but she wants to have run the home she's in. My sister-in-law and I have put up with her meddling as long as we can stand it. How could we? We have discussed leaving our husbands and letting them work it out with her as best they can. Won't you tell us what steps we can take to separate ourselves before we resort to leaving?

TWO YOUNG SISTERS-IN-LAW.

ANSWER:

Don't you think it would be silly for you to let a meddlesome M-O-L push you two out of your warm places? Is she a bit cruel as you describe her, this in-law one you have above all others that would gratify you and surely this is not what you want. Besides, if you two can out on your husbands, how would you be guilty of the same thing you are whaling her for—home wrecking?

If you love your husbands and value your peace there's no need to better way to settle your problem than you've thought of. You see little soul have no obligation to their mother which they must discharge and you will find that if you make it easy for them they will love you accordingly. There's not a man living who doesn't earn her living after all these years of sailing and sleeping free. There's not a chance that she will live anywhere but with her boys. quit fretting over it, you can get the best of it. Naturally you don't love the old lady, and can't—but you can be polite to her and show her no cause to carry tales to her sons. You'd be surprised how she'll back off from meddling if you two treated her to formal politeness, never discussing your husbands or your family finances with her, never asking favors of her, never having any but pleasant conversation with her.

Then if you two would agree not to criticise her to your husbands, nor be intimate that she's a nuisance and a pest, they would not only believe the millennium had dawned but they would be squelching her if she undertook to rake you over the coals to them. At present they can't defend you because they know you despise their mother and give her as good as she sends.

Of course this will be hard to do but whatever it takes of self-control, tongue-biting, teeth-gritting and nail-digging, it will be cheap if it enables you to keep the peace and live amicably with your husbands. And speaking of economy, what are you going to use for money if you leave home? You haven't got grown sons to stand between you and the poorhouse as the cal shops before long.

There are plenty of unfurnish electric coffee-making machines that ring a bell, flash a red light and shut off when the coffee is done, and even manufacture out the proper amounts of coffee and water. Surely such a machine would leave the novice housewife with little excuse for coffee that fails to suit.

Utensils Foolproof

We had a heated argument with one woman who maintained that such machines would prevent the wife from learning how to cook. Why, I argued, should she learn to cook when she could have foolproof utensils to do it for her? Why should she learn to make toast when she could have a toaster that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make coffee when she could have a percolator that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make cereal when she could have a double boiler that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make waffles when she could have a waffle iron that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a cake when she could have a cake mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a pie when she could have a pie crust mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a roast when she could have a roaster that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a salad when she could have a salad bowl that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a pudding when she could have a pudding mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a sauce when she could have a sauce mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a soup when she could have a soup mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a stew when she could have a stew mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a roast when she could have a roaster that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a salad when she could have a salad bowl that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a pudding when she could have a pudding mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a sauce when she could have a sauce mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a soup when she could have a soup mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a stew when she could have a stew mixer that would do it perfectly?

For Newlyweds, That Is; Utensils Insure Successful Cooking

(Homemaking Helps)

By ELEANOR ROSS

WITH THE poetic pledge to "relish breakfast deadlock from the holy state of wedlock", manufacturers of electrical kitchen gadgets feel that they have done their part to virtually guarantee marital bliss for newlyweds.

Crispy grilled bacon, toast or waffles done just to a turn, and coffee cooked to the taste of the individual king, state the manufacturers, may be simple matters even to the most untrained young housewife. There are all sorts of automatic coffee pots, grills and toasters due to appear in your local shops before long. There are futuristic electric coffee-making machines that ring a bell, flash a red light and shut off when the coffee is done, and even manufacture out the proper amounts of coffee and water. Surely such a machine would leave the novice housewife with little excuse for coffee that fails to suit.

Utensils Foolproof

We had a heated argument with one woman who maintained that such machines would prevent the wife from learning how to cook. Why, I argued, should she learn to cook when she could have foolproof utensils to do it for her? Why should she learn to make toast when she could have a toaster that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make coffee when she could have a percolator that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make cereal when she could have a double boiler that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make waffles when she could have a waffle iron that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a cake when she could have a cake mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a pie when she could have a pie crust mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a roast when she could have a roaster that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a salad when she could have a salad bowl that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a pudding when she could have a pudding mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a sauce when she could have a sauce mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a soup when she could have a soup mixer that would do it perfectly? Why should she learn to make a stew when she could have a stew mixer that would do it perfectly?

If she is going to be a good cook, she'll be one, and that, in the meantime, foolproof cooking utensils are going to prevent a lot of unhappiness and misunderstandings.

Now burned toast battles are artistically outlawed by new toasters that signal when it's time to turn each slice. And bacon and eggs better than mother ever cooked can be cooked by daughter with little or no skill. She simply places the bacon and eggs on her electric grill, sets the indicator for low, medium or well-done, turns the current on and serves at the sound of the gong.

New Waffle Iron

To offer variety and lend a masterly touch to the morning meal, Mrs. Newlywed may pour ready-prepared batter into her automatic waffle iron, and, at a given signal, place a golden waffle before her impressed spouse. And the chances are that he won't believe that the credit is due to the gadget and will feel sure that his bride is a waffle expert. And that goes even if she is the proud possessor of a de luxe model iron whose metal fingers will pick up the finished waffle and hand it to her. Then if boiled eggs are on the morning menu, there is a special egg cooker. Set the indicator for three minutes, say, and at the end of that time the cooker shuts itself off and its lids pops up, presenting the eggs ready to serve.

Children, especially, love Kellogg's Rice Krispies. They eat those tasty, toasted bubbles of rice without coaxing. That tempting "snap-crackle-pop" sound arouses their interest—and their appetites! The only cereal so crisp it crackles in milk or cream!

Rice Krispies are ready-to serve—light, wholesome, and easily digested. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

OSTEND is CHARMING RESORT IN BELGIUM

(Three-Minute Journey)

By TEMPLE MANNING

NEWS STORIES tell of a good season at Ostend, perhaps the best season in many years. But it is perfectly safe to assert that, however good times are at Ostend, there'll be little of the gaiety and magnificence that used to make it the international gathering at this lovely Belgian shore resort and spa. At one time royalty and near-royalty, beautiful women, famous men and a smattering of smart adventurers used to converge on Ostend. Then it was the thing to be in at least some time there, each summer. There was always a smart throng in the really splendid main casino at night and in the glittering palace by day. But without all these folk, Ostend is still a grand place.

The beach is perfect, and the King Albert promenade, the setting for happy crowds. Esgard shops, de luxe hotels and lively cafes line this 10-mile sea front. The town itself is modern, with flower-filled squares and shopping streets full of animation. There's a luxurious air about the whole place, always bustling, always lively, and very beautiful.

Continental Casino

The Casino-Kursaal, when it is illuminated at night, is handsome beyond measure, with pools of colored light, is all that one expects of a continental casino. And even if it hasn't the play that Monte Carlo gets, its 46 tables of baccarat and roulette, really a private club, are always busy. But the town prefers to think of its other aspects—the happy family groups playing and swimming, the marvelous flashing, and the concerts and entertainments. The municipal orchestra is especially fine.

The thermal palace in Leopold park is truly a palace, one of the most magnificent and best-appointed spas in Europe. The park itself would be ornamental and altogether lovely even if it didn't contain curative springs. The pump room is in the royal galleries, while the hot and cold showers are in the thermal palace.

During the summer months, the smart set is out at one of the most beautiful race tracks in Europe the Wellington track, just a short distance inland from the promenade. The club house, set in beautiful flower gardens, is a pleasant and convivial spot. The golf club and its fine, 18-hole course, wonderfully situated amidst the Dunes (with plenty of hazards) is another place that always draws a smart crowd. Tennis and golf tournaments, regattas, carnival, battles of flowers fetes, motor and aviation meets—there's something doing every day at Ostend. A progressive municipality sees to that. Each years sees innovations and improvements, and a determination to become once more the premier seashore resort of Europe.

Coping with the chinch bug.

Have you noticed brown spots in your lawn, with a yellowish circle around the outside? If so, you will probably find it is the work of the chinch bug. The brown circle is composed of dead grass from which the chinch bug has sucked the life-giving juice or sap. The yellowish circle is the area where the bugs are still at work.

The illustration of a chinch bug on a blade of grass, as shown in the Garden-Graph, will help you to identify this pest. The chinch bug has a black body and white wings. The adult may grow to one-eighth of one-fifth of an inch in length. The young bugs do not have wings and may be either yellowish or reddish in color.

Since there are several broods of chinch bugs a year, efforts should be made to eradicate them. Powdered sodium arsenate dust can be sprinkled on the lawn as one defense against the chinch bug. If this is done do not water the lawn for several days afterwards. The sodium arsenate dust at the rate of 25 pounds to 1,000 square feet of lawn. Nicotine sulphate also is effective, using a quart to 100 gallons of water with soapsuds added to serve as a sticking agent. This mixture can be sprayed upon the lawn.

Coffee Used In Tasty Sweets

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

COFFEE WEEK, observed recently, was a huge success. Besides, it served to remind many of us that there are many delicious coffee-flavored desserts.

Coffee marlow is the sort of confection that makes a big hit with the bridge club. Ingredients include one marshallows, one-quarter cup very strong, hot, freshly-brewed coffee, two-thirds cup milk, one-eighth teaspoon salt, and whipped cream. Cut marshmallows into small pieces and add hot coffee. Let stand about one hour or until marshmallows are soft. Stir, then add milk, salt and whipped cream. Four into mechanical refrigerator trays and freeze about four hours.

Coffee parfait is another easy-to-make but most effective dessert. Allow enough to grace the most important occasion. For eight servings you'll need one cup strong, freshly-brewed coffee, one cup sugar, four eggs, two cups whipped cream. Boil together coffee and sugar for 10 minutes. Beat eggs slightly with a fork. Add hot syrup continuing slow beating with a fork. Cook in double boiler until mixture thickens. Cool. When cool, fold in stiffly-beaten cream. Place in refrigerating unit, cover with thick cup seedless raisins, one cup strong, freshly-brewed coffee, one teaspoon vanilla and one cup cream, whipped, will make six to eight portions. Place in water in thickens as it cools! When slightly cool, add coffee and vanilla. Chill; cool, add coffee and vanilla. Chill; serve in sherbet or parfait glasses.

King Carl Hubbell Comes Up With Sore Arm and Giants' Pennant Stock Hits the Skids

Probably Necessary to Operate on Ailing Flipper

YANKEES GAIN

Split Twin Bill While Cleveland Loses to Browns

By SID FEDER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

King Carl Hubbell passed Lefty Grove on the sore arm list today, and New York Giants' pennant stock, like that of Boston Red Sox before it, hit the skids.

Hubbell, clubbed by Brooklyn Dodgers 5-3 yesterday, came up with an ailing pitching wing that may necessitate an operation. It will definitely keep him on the sidelines for at least a week or two, and may prevent him from taking his place on the firing line the rest of the year.

Somehow it seems hard to believe. Here are the two greatest lefthanders of their day, old Scuppernong and old Moe—probably the most feared pitching pair in the game in the last six or eight years—and both out with the same month. Grove's arm went "dead."

Giants' Meal-Ticket

There are many who don't put this screwball among the all-time southpaw greats, but never had the stuff or the blinding speed of Grove. But he has playing "brains", he has been the Giants' meal-ticket for at least five years, he has pitched them into three pennants, has class, and he has a competitive temperament, a coolness under fire, never surpassed in any sport.

And consider too, that he and Melvin Ott, the "Meal-Ticket" whom McGraw handed down, have made Manager Bill Terry look like a "genius" ever since the terrible one-two over the reins from the old man.

Still Five Games Back

Meantime the Giants are five games back of the Pirates right now, and with the season past the two-thirds mark every day that deficit lasts makes the Bucs' chances surer.

Fortunately for Terry's Terriers, their setback yesterday didn't send them farther in the hole, for the Pirates shorebird a 5-1 drubbing at the hands of St. Louis Cardinals and Lefty Bob Weiland's four-hit flinging.

The Yankees, despite a double-header split with Washington, saw their American League stretched to nine full games when the second place Cleveland Indians (and Bobby Feller) had their ears pinned back 9-1 by St. Louis Browns. Wes Ferrell, making his Yankee debut, outlasted his ex-mates for a 6-5 win in the 11-inning opener. Harry (the Cat) Kelly tossed a six hitter for a 6-3 decision for his Nats in the nightcap.

Good Hurling Seen

Throughout the big league program, good hurling abounded. Buck Newsom's three-hitter featured the Browns' win over the Indians, enabling the Brownies to climb into a seventh-place tie. Jim Bagby turned in a three-hitter and the Red Sox whitewashed the Athletics 2-0. Paul Derringer, allowed seven hits, chilled the former himself, and the Cincinnati Reds nipped the Cubs 3-2. Then George Gill's eight-hit effort gave the Tigers a 5-1 verdict over Chicago White Sox.

WEIRD GAME WON BY THE BISONS

Jersey Giants Defeated to the Tune of 21-6 by Buffalo

(By The Associated Press)

Jersey City Giants never do things by halves. One time out they are good, the next they are bad.

Last night was one of the latter. Buffalo Bisons trimmed the Giants in a hilarious ball game 21-6. Elsewhere the league stuck to conventional baseball. Rochester and Syracuse split a double bill, the Wings winning 5-0 in 11 innings and then losing 7-2. Toronto beat Baltimore 7-4 and Newark's double bill at Montreal was postponed because of rain and wet grounds.

The affair at Buffalo was something. To go into the awful details the Bisons collected 24 hits, nine of them for extra bases; scored five runs in each of the first two innings and seven in the seventh; every starting player got two or more hits; Dan Carnevale, Jim Martin and Ollie Carnegie hit home runs.

Par Broken 12 Times In First Day's Play Of Canadian Open

By ELMER DULMAGE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Mississauga Country Club, Toronto, Aug. 19 (CP)—Gene Kunes, the young Pennsylvanian who slithered from the golfing heights almost as rapidly as he made the ascent in 1935, was back today with the money-men—back from nowhere at all and determined to stay.

As the field started the second 18-hole round of the Canadian open championship, Kunes was on top. He and strapping Ed Oliver of Wilmington, Del., posted 67s, five under par, in the opening assault on Mississauga yesterday. They held a two-stroke margin over Sam Snead of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., and Paul Runyan of White Plains, N.Y.

It was the first time since he captured the Canadian open in 1935 that Kunes had looked back over his shoulder at any golfing field of distinction. Plagued by a stomach ailment, he Norristown, Pa., boy dropped from sight for two seasons and made an unsuccessful attempt to get back last year.

The Kunes comeback topped all other first-day developments which included the following:

Walter Hagen, the old globe-trotter whose last major victory was the Canadian open on this same course in 1931, scored a nifty 71.

A Los Angeles youth, 22-year-old Bill Williamson, hitch-hiked to the scene of the championship and scored a 70. His brother, Chuck, caddied for him.

Par was broken by 12 players—but the only Canadian in this group was lanky Bob Gray Jr. of Toronto who had 71. Bobby Burns of Montreal carded par 72.

Hagen is "swell" and the caddy ban wisecrack with him. Ralph Guldahl is "good but leave him alone." Diegel's caddy has a formula; it consists of "good morning" and "good night" and no talk in between. And Leo's boy can select the club he thinks best but he mustn't offer it to his player. He picks it out and holds it at his side. Usually Diegel takes it.

Most of them depend on the caddy for the choice of club. Hagen invariably accepts the caddy's choice. Cooper often doesn't. Guldahl regularly names his choice. Sam Snead talks it over with the boy.

Yet any of them may be the winner.

Arrangements for the first round junior O.B.A. play-offs were made during the game with Oshawa at Belleville next Wednesday afternoon and the return game at Oshawa one week from tomorrow. "Oshawa's junior team does not appear to be as strong as we had been previously led to believe. The local ball club but our kids should welcome his curve with potent batswinging that should put plenty of hits. Ross Kelleher and Doherty are better appearing hurlers than Rinch, the defeated Cobourg pitcher, so we are looking forward to real good series with the Oshawa kids," predicted Coach Barrett upon his return yesterday. The local delegation continued in to Toronto to take in the night game.

Drs. E. A. and H. C. Carleton Defeated by Pair From Balmy Beach

Toronto, Aug. 19 (CP)—Singles play started today in the Ontario Lawn Bowling tournament with entries so numerous the matches were divided between two Toronto clubs.

Play went into the fourth round today in the Ellis doubles with no surprises to match the defeat yesterday of Hall and Liberty skip and vice-skip of the St. Matthew's Toronto four that won the Gold Cup. Dunbar and Sobrite of the Toronto Monarch Club defeated the favored pair 21-16.

C. Norris and T. Mead of the Balmy Beach Club put their club in the lead for permanent possession of the Willison doubles trophy yesterday when they defeated Dr. E. A. Carleton and Dr. H. C. Carleton of Stirling, Ont., by 22-14. The Stirling pair had some good ends, but never threatened the Toronto team's lead.

Mead and Norris won their way to the finals in a close victory over Brown and Perry of Ottawa, 14-11. Dr. Carleton rinks were eliminated from the Ellis doubles during the first day's play, Cannell and Burgess of Ottawa lost 15-10 to Wheler and Baillie, Toronto stars; Paten and Girls of Ottawa bowed before the skill of McCrae and Vellams of Windsor 17-4.

DOMINION CHAMPS TORONTO ARGOS WILL HAVE POWER

Driving Right Foot of Bob Isbister Potent Factor

A GREAT MACHINE

Montreal, Hamilton And Ottawa Will be Strong

By JACK CALDER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Aug. 19 (CP)—Here's the football training campaign under way again and the most important titling in the interprovincial union is still that driving right foot of Bob Isbister, who kicks 'em high and far for Toronto Argonauts.

The Argo halfback is the most compelling youngster to come up in the east in years, and makes the rest of the big four teams are hiding a new kind of energy he'll be booting the double blue a good piece along the way to another Dominion championship this fall. He left the intercollegiate ranks last year just in time to help mould Argos into the country's title team. As yet there is no factor in the League picture as potent as his long-range shelling.

Isbister, as if he will be able to take line, rear back and left fly again, because he will have just as punishing a line ahead of him. Coach Lou Hayman still figures to have a great ground machine, with Art West, Johnny Edwards and Teddy Morris running the ends.

So who will stop the Argonauts?

Tigers Lose Welch

No eastern team stands out so clearly in its group. Hamilton Tigers are losing Huck Welch, whose kicking has kept them up there for years and now is retiring; Ottawa Rough Riders are in the position of having to coax some of their veterans to play; and Montreal Chic will replace Montreal Indians with a group of untried players.

The Argonauts lost only one game last fall—that to Montreal Indians, most of which will be playing with Montreal Nationals in the Ontario Rugby Football Union.

Montreal and Hamilton are undertaking building programs with players who have learned their football on minor teams of the two cities. One or the other may be able to put together a lot of brawn and fighting spirit. Ottawa has the biggest line in the country and goes great guns on wet Saturdays.

But that Argo line will still be charging, those ends will be cutting down ball-carriers, the speedy half-line will be racing around the ends—and Isbister will still be kicking. Who will stop them?

In Greek law courts, speakers were timed by water clocks.

The annual advent of big-time golfers to the Canadian Open Golf tournament, which is being held this year at Toronto-Mississauga commencing yesterday, always excites a section of Canadian golf fans which is seldom noticed by the crowds of spectators. Yet this group is one of the important factors in the outcome of the championship and could decide who would carry away the. Seagram Gold Cup.

The caddies form the background for the stars. And, little known to most golfers, the players recognize this fact, with resultant caddy fees of $50, $75 and often to $150. Hence the excitement which is already agitating the caddy section of Toronto's populace, for the lads who draw the biggest guns stand the best chance of getting into the big money.

Roy Instance, when Joe Kirkwood won the Canadian Open at Royal York in 1933, he handed his caddy $150. Harry Cooper, who was running-up and is now Seagram Cup Holder, gave his caddy nearly as much. And that, in any man's language, is big money for three days toiling of a bag of clubs. Walter Hagen, who is returning to the Open this year after a long absence, paid his caddy as much as Cooper, Jimmy Thompson, Horton Smith, Lew Diegel, Slammin' Sam Snead and many others.

Some caddies carry for the same players every year. Some players like to have certain caddies with them which come in weeks ahead of the tournament, and the lad they want again. For instance, Hagen is already reported to have written to one Toronto caddy asking him to be on deck for the practice rounds before the match. The lad will be there because it means $50 whether Hagen wins or loses and probably $150 if he wins.

The boys learn every eccentricity of the players. For instance, Harry Cooper is a "good guy but touchy."

Hagen is "swell" and the caddy can wisecrack with him. Ralph Guldahl is "good but leave him alone." Diegel's caddy has a formula; it consists of "good morning" and "good night" and no talk in between. And Leo's boy can select the club he thinks best but he mustn't offer it to his player. He picks it out and holds it at his side. Usually Diegel takes it.

Most of them depend on the caddy for the choice of club. Hagen invariably accepts the caddy's choice. Cooper often doesn't. Guldahl regularly names his choice. Sam Snead talks it over with the boy.

Yet any of them may be the winner.

Manager Frank Folwell, Coach Leo Barrett and Secretary Jack McVeigh of the Belleville Kiwanis Juniors took in the Cobourg at Oshawa junior game doing a little scouting on the side. Wednesday, when Ralph "High-Pockets" McCabe hurled the Motor City nine to the Lake Shore title. Arrangements for the first round junior O.B.A. play-offs were made during the game with Oshawa at Belleville next Wednesday afternoon and the return game at Oshawa one week from tomorrow. "Oshawa's junior team does not appear to be as strong as we had been previously led to believe. The local ball club but our kids should welcome his curve with potent batswinging that should put plenty of hits. Ross Kelleher and Doherty are better appearing hurlers than Rinch, the defeated Cobourg pitcher, so we are looking forward to real good series with the Oshawa kids," predicted Coach Barrett upon his return yesterday. The local delegation continued in to Toronto to take in the night game.

Through respect of the death of Infant Kiser, four day old child of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert Kiser, last night's Corbyn A.C. at Point Anne was postponed until this evening. Mr. Kiser, the father of the child being a member of the Corbyn team.

Frankie Campbell who died after a bout with Max Baer on the coast some time back — Armstrong ought to watch himself —he lands far too many below the belt. How in the world could Referee Kavanagh score the 13th—far and away Ambers' best round—an even heat?

ARMSTRONG WINS THIRD TITLE BY BEATING AMBERS

Winning a decision over Lou Ambers in 15 rounds of listless fighting, Henry Armstrong becomes the first man in ring history to hold three world titles at the same time. The St. Louis Negro adds the lightweight crown to the featherweight and welterweight championships which he recently won. Ambers is pictured on the floor of the ring in Madison Square Garden in the fifth round for a count of one after taking a hard punch to the jaw. The referee is Billy Cavanaugh, who voted Armstrong winner when the two judges differed in their decisions.

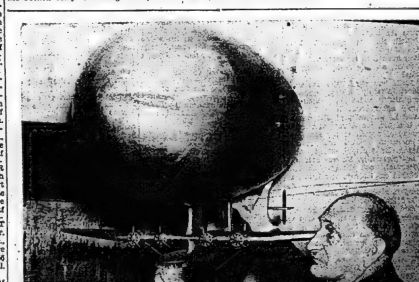
BOYS' HOBOE TOUR ENDS ON POLICE STATION FLOOR



Real hoboes who thought the lads too young to venture upon the trails of "hobo land" brought these two Toronto boys, missing from their homes for two days, to a railway stationmaster at Washago, Ont., when they came across the adventurers in a nearby "jungle" petting potatoes. Police of Orillia permitted them to sleep in a corner of the police station, as shown ABOVE, until their parents were reached. "We wanted to be hoboes and caught a freight train from Toronto," they told Police Chief W. O. Carson, of Orillia.

WAR GAMES HALT WHEN POILUS HEAR "SOUP'S ON"

When the French equivalent of "Soup's On!" rings out in the Celebrated Mountain where part of the French army is holding maneuvres, scenes like this take but a few minutes to form. Gathered round the field kitchen are members of the Alpine Poilus and the serving of the soup brings a contented appearance to all faces, especially the party just receiving his helping.

INVENTOR CLAIMS TRANSATLANTIC SHIP IS FOOLPROOF

Travellers by air will in future be conveyed across the Atlantic in aircraft similar to this model, if plans of its inventor, Herman Kuhn, 64-year-old German-American, calls it "a dirigible" and claims it is a fool-proof flying machine, at the same time announcing the formation of the International Dirigible Airship Co., which he says will manufacture the airplanes and put them into regular transatlantic service. The new craft consists of a huge aeroplane suspended from a helium-filled dirigible. There will be accommodation for 72 passengers and the safety factor is that the giant airplane can neither nor-dive nor sink.

COMEDY TEAM BROKEN UP BY STUDIO

OLIVER HARDY STAN LAUREL

The film comedy team of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy was broken up by announcement from the actor's employers, Hal Roach Studios, that Laurel's contract had been terminated and that Harry Langdon will team with Hardy for future pictures. The sad-faced Laurel and his fat and merry companion are pictured here together.

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

"I'm providing for you, Katie. That's the best I can do."

"You've built up a big practice and now you're leaving it for somebody to pick up. Why? Don't tell me you are going to save the country! There are plenty to do that. You're not even going to fight!"

"I tried to get into the ranks. They don't want me."

"Sure you tried," she said hysterically. "You'd be willing to die to get away. For that's it, isn't it? You want to get away from me!"

She was quiet enough when he left, however. After Dad's going his camp was not going to France; and he had left her the Lewis money, ten thousand dollars in her name at the bank. It was a reckless thing to do, Katie being Katie, but he knew in his soul that she had been partially right and that the money was the price he was paying for escape.

On that last day he made his calls with mixed emotions. Patients, friends, the hospital. And then that last night, with everything done, his duffle piled in the front hall downstairs, his orders in the pocket of his uniform, Katie gone upstairs to sulk in bed, he sat alone with his pipe in the back office, only his desk lamp lighted and his ghosts beginning to crowd around him. Mistakes in judgment, errors in this and that. And then back inevitably to that last bitter talk with Beverly. The talk going on and one and getting nowhere.

"Men aren't angels, Beverly. You knew Jerry. You weren't marrying a boy. What was there to do?"

"Make him marry her. Why in the name of humanity let me do it?"

"It was her secret, not mine, my dear."

"What did that matter? I don't understand, Chris."

"If you cared enough to marry him, Beverly—"

"I didn't. I knew all along that I didn't."

"But you went ahead with it."

"Yes," she said drearily, "I went ahead with it."

He had never seen her since. She was twenty-one now, at the very height of her beauty, popular, an accomplished hostess. She and Jerry were a handsome pair when he saw a picture of them taken together at Palm Beach, and they were smiling into the camera. If it was acting, it was good acting. And soon after that he went and saw that Jerry had gone into aviation. It was like him to choose aviation.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Now in an hour or so Chris himself was going to war. He did not care greatly whether he returned or not. He went up and kissed Katie good-bye, smiling at her as she sat on the bed in her chintzered room.

"Be a good girl," he said, "and don't worry about me. I'll be all right."

He had a new distinction in his uniform, and suddenly Katie burst into tears and held out her arms.

"You're mine, Chris," she said. "Mine! Never forget that."

"I never have forgotten," he told her gravely.

Before he left he made his usual rounds of the house, and at the kitchen door he stopped and looked out into the yard where Katie had planted grass and shrubbery. Henry's old shed still stood there, a mute memorial to the futility of human hopes.

X X X

After the first break Katie was happy enough. She bought a small pin with a star on it and put a card with a similar star in the window of the front office. She found that Chris's enlistment gave her a certain prestige, too; that and the Red Cross. She was meeting women she had never happened to know, and going to houses she had never expected to see. The war had leveled all classes.

Dick had been a problem at first. He found her bankbook one day with that deposit of Chris's in it, and after that he was continually borrowing money from her. But one day the draft caught him, and she breathed easier than for months.

Luckily perhaps for her, "over there" was busy. So many doctors had gone into the service that those who remained had all that they could do. He gave up his city position about that time, and Jenkins drew a long breath of relief.

Just before Christmas Katie returned up in a town adjacent to Chris's camp. The first warning he had was a telephone message from the local hotel.

J. B. BOYCE

"I'm here in town. I've got a room, but the place is jammed. Can't I come out to camp?"

"You couldn't stay here. There is a hostess house, but it's pretty exciting. Christmas, you know."

He had worked hard that day, but she made him drive into town that night, and he found her almost in tears in the small hotel room.

"You go down and talk to that men at the desk, Chris," she said when she saw him. "They've got better room than this, and I know it."

She seemed strange to him, like some one from another life and she was wearing an enormous corsage of violets tied with violet ribbon. He tried to smile at her, but his lips felt stiff.

"Looking pretty fine, aren't you?"

"Those?" She touched the flowers. "Bob Barrett gave them to me. He saw me off."

"Still hanging around is he?"

"If you're going to be jealous Chris—"

"Jealous!" But he was instantly ashamed of it. He stood down over her. "Well, Merry Christmas anyhow, my dear," he said, and kissed her.

He went down to the hotel office to ask for a room, very glad to escape for a minute or two, to draw his breath and recover himself. But he could not change the room, nor did he stay there that night or the next. He went up during the day, usually late in the afternoon, but after the first few hours it was usually to find the room crowded and some service sandwiches and cocktails to all comers, mostly junior officers.

On Christmas Eve he took Katie to the cantonment, where Ted Barrett had got rooms, a supper and cooked a bottle of champagne. Katie stood in the door of Chris's room and surveyed it.

"What a sickening place!" she said. "And it's cold."

She cheered over Ted and his wine, however, and after the party as they drove back, she put her head on Chris's shoulder and ran her arm through his.

"You will stay tonight, Chris, won't you? It's Christmas Eve."

"I can't, my dear. I may have to operate in an hour or two."

Then, the champagne having its effect, she lost some of the veneer of the past few years and reverted to the Katie of the early days. He was still in love with Beverly, deny it or not. He had no pride, still caring for a woman who had thrown him over, and who was married to somebody else anyhow.

They parted at the hotel, Katie getting out without a word and declining his outstretched hand. He stood on the pavement watching her until she was out of sight. She looked angry and defiant and very lonely, and he had an impulse to follow her. After all, it was his fault more than hers. Everything for us to be honest. That's why you came, isn't it?"

"That's why I came, Chris. I've grown up now. I know—"

"You know that I have always cared for you," he said. "I've forgotten you sometimes; we all do that, Beverly. It's our salvation. But I have always loved you. I suppose I always shall."

She was very quiet, looking at him with her direct gaze, like the girl years ago on the doorstep.

"No," she said slowly. "It can hurt nobody now for me to know that, or for you to know what you do. Just to be sure that somebody cares, Chris; that hurts nobody, does it? It makes things easier, and harder, too, in a way. It wasn't money, at this. We might have——" She drew a long breath. "Chris, why did you never answer that letter of mine?"

Chris stared at her for a moment, completely bewildered by her question. Rapidly he went back in his mind over those days following his engagement; then in a staggering flash recalled, as certainly as if he had witnessed the scene, he knew that Katie had destroyed that letter, realized that it was she who had thrust his life away from Beverly's. But Katie was his wife now, and, strengthened by that uncompromising spirit of his, he steeled his will before he spoke.

"We are not looking back to-night, darling," he told her. "That water is over the dam, and let's forget it. We have a bit of time together, and that's all I ask."

A bit of time was, for not long after that he looked at his watch and pushed back his chair. Then he leaned forward again and put a hand over hers.

"We may never do this again, Beverly, but this was our hour. I'll carry it with me the rest of my life."

Get Wise to Constipation!

When you're constipated, it's a great temptation to be satisfied with quick relief. But glycerin may become a habit. And they don't keep constipation from returning. It's so much better to get at the cause of the trouble.

If you eat what most people do, chances are the only thing the matter is you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean how much you eat. It means a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a bowel movement.

What to do? Eat a dish of Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast every day and drink plenty of water. This crunchy toasted cereal is the ideal "bulk" food. It also contains the natural intestinal tonic vitamin B1. All-Bran is made by Kellogg in London, Ontario. Sold by every grocer.

After supper ma came in the living room with 2 dresses in 2 boxes, saying to pop, 7 had these 2 dresses sent home, Willyum, and I'm on the horns of a quandry. I mean I dont know wich one to choose. It seems to me they're both equally becoming and well made, strangely enough, because one is priced 34 dollars and the other one only 16, but to my mind the only consideration is wich is the more becoming. Irregardless of price, dont you agree with me, Willyum? she said.

Definitely wich is the 16 dollar one? pop said, and ma said, I'll put them both on for you to see, and after the other, so I can get your candid judgement, I'll put the black one on first.

Wich she did, say? What's your honest opinion of it, Willyum.

Is that the 34 dollar one? pop said, and ma said, The pleets may make it a little old looking, dont you think so, Illnum?

Maybe so, I never did trust a pleet, pop said, and ma said, I'll try on the blue one for you.

Wich she did saying, Well, now you've seen them both, it all depends on you.

Wich one did you say was 16 dollers? pop said, and ma said, I didn't say, and pop said, The dollar one, and ma said But you dont know wich one was dollers for land sakes.

That doesn't matter I'm sykick, pop said, and ma said, O, I think I'll take the black one, even if it is more expensive, after all it's the most becoming and that should be the only consideration, you said so yourself, Willyum.

O, did I. I wasn't listening pop said.

And he got in back of the sporting page and ma went in her room to make up her mind some more.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Thunderstorm conditions! These storms often occur on the late afternoon of an apparently quiet day. What brings about the seven to upheaval as a thunderstorm? It is all caused by a condition of atmospheric instability. This is something we can not see but on many days the lower layers of air next the earth become very warm and hence light while the upper layers remain relatively cool and heavy. This condition is one of instability because we all know warm air is forced to rise. These uprushes form cumulus clouds and later thunderstorms with thunder and lightning, as all brought about by differences in temperature.

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Aug. 20 (CP)—Pressure is high on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts with a deep disturbance centred just west of Hudson Bay and a shallow trough extending southward across the Great Lakes to the southwest States. The weather has been comparatively cool in the Maritime Provinces with light showers in many districts and thunderstorms have been general in Northern Ontario, while from Southern Ontario to the Maritime Provinces the weather has been fair and warm.

Manitoba: Fresh northwest to west winds; partly cloudy and rather cool. Saskatchewan: Light winds; fair with stationary or a little higher temperature.

Saskatchewan and Alberta: Northwest to west winds; mostly fair today and Sunday with stationary or a little higher temperature.

Never Had Lesson Takes Plane Up, Lands Perfectly

Troy, O., Aug. 20.—(AP)—Eugene Netaley drew up for the United States Department of Commerce today a report explaining how his 17-year-old brother Truman kept the family plane aloft and made a perfect edge for an hour and a half yesterday with an all-of-a-sudden plane flight.

Truman who never had a flight lesson, got behind the stand-land monoplane out of the Netaley barn and told playmates he just "wanted to taxi around the pasture."

The next thing they knew, Truman was in the air. "Don't worry, Mom, I'll land it," read one.

Retired, Reserve Army Officers To Register in Germany by Sept. 20

Berlin, Aug. 20.—(CP-Havas)—Notices were posted in Berlin today calling on all retired and reserve army officers to register with the Berlin police prefect before Sept. 20.

The white placards, which attracted widespread attention, also called on officers on leave to register.

Exceptions are made for officers having the rank of major-general, or higher, as well as those over 65. Such officers, the notices said, need receive "military cards" upon registration. The placards were signed by Count Wolf Heinrich von Helldorf, the Berlin police prefect.

Roosevelt's Words Called 'Gesture Of Deep Friendship of Nations'

Vancouver, Aug. 20.—(CP)—Hon. Ian Mackenzie, Minister of National Defence, said yesterday President Roosevelt's speech at Kingston, Ont., Thursday was simply a further gesture of that deep-rooted friendship between our peoples.

The President said United States would not stand idly by if domination of Canada were violated by threatened by "any other empire."

Mr. Mackenzie said the address was made in a "definite spirit of friendship," but "in no other spirit."

The National Defence Minister did not expand his reference. He declined to comment on any possible effect on Canadian-American policy the speech might effect, though he expressed himself as being "warmly apreciative" of the American attitude voiced by Mr. Roosevelt.

JAPS CHECKMATED ON ALL FRONTS CHINESE DECLARE

Smashing Victory Scored After Japanese Leave Range of Guns

GUERRILLAS BUSY

Associated Press Foreign Staff

Shanghai, Aug. 20—(AP)—Chinese declared today their forces had checkmated the Japanese on all fronts. The Japanese said a new large scale drive against Chinese guerrillas in Shantung Province limited by land transport 10,000 irregulars near Tsinan, Hantung provincial capital.

But the Chinese insisted the 42,000 fight-and-run warriors in Shantung still were active and campaigns in other areas were "continuing to be successful." Guerrillas were said to have driven within 36 miles of Nanking.

West of Hukiang, the Yangtze river port used as a base for the campaign against Hankow, 135 miles upstream, the Chinese claimed to have won a smashing victory when a Japanese force of 3,000 men, being landed from warships, was routed after leaving the subsection of the invaders' naval guns.

In southern Shansi Province, where the Japanese have been attempting a new campaign to carry supplies across the Yellow River, Chinese maintaining the invaders were becoming "increasingly concerned" over the combined onslaughts of Chinese troops and irregulars.

The defenders said they had destroyed again all the railway trackage in Shansi that Japanese had repaired.

Discontinued reports said the high command of the Japanese armies in Central China was reorganizing its disastrous retreat from Shanghai to Nanking, 186 miles farther inland.

North of Peiping, the Chinese said, the guerrillas were keeping the invaders on the defensive by their harrying tactics.

On the Kiangsi front, centre of major fighting since floods stopped the Japanese Yellow river offensive in July and the Japanese declared Kiukiang July 25, battles raged near Kiukiang, a communique 18 miles south of Kiukiang.

Flight of Japanese and United States Nationals who took refuge at Kuling a month ago was uncertain. Chinese said they killed or wounded 100 Japanese and captured munitions near Kuling.

JUMP OFF TRAINS TO CROSS LINE INTO SWITZERLAND

Thick Gloves Give Jewish Refugees Concealment in Swiss Territory

MANY SMUGGLED

Berlin, Aug. 20 (AP)—More than 1,000 Austrian Jews, it was estimated today, have smuggled across to Switzerland the past month by the modern versions of the Scarlet Pimpernel and the underground railway.

Three hundred Swiss frontier guards are trying to cope with the flood of refugees, but the Northern Swiss Cantons have been mobilized. France reinforced her guard at the border points. German promised increased vigilance.

The migration has been helped by a secret organization of Germans and Austrians who with earlier fugitives, supplied money and shelter for fugitives on the way to the frontier. Much of the money has been aided secretly to reach the Jews through the black market ground railway in American Civil War fashion. Gold is smuggled concealed into England during the French Revolution.

Two Desperate Chances

Jews, fearing for their future under the Nazi regime frequently are willing to take desperate chances to get away. Emigration from Austria has become increasingly difficult as a result of intermationbal border conditions and Germany and foreign laws, despite the expressed Nazi determination they must go.

The "underground" border traffic is particularly active near the Swiss town of Diepoldsau, whose limits extend five miles along the former Austrian border.

Jewish men and women, young and old, are found day and night, liable for fleeing Germany. Crossing the border is much more difficult in other places where the Rhine forms a natural boundary and is dangerous because of whirlpools and treacherous currents.

Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett Makes Comment On Speech

Calgary, Aug. 20 (CP)—Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, former Conservative leader, commenting on President Roosevelt's address at Kingston, Ont., Thursday, said:

"So far as I understand from press reports, the statement made by President Roosevelt does not go beyond interpretations placed upon the Monroe doctrine, a number of successive Presidents of the United States.

"In any event the provisions of the Constitution of the United States must not be overlooked in considering any such statement by the President."

Mr. Roosevelt said at Kingston that the United States would not stand idly by if domination of Canada was threatened.

NEUTRALITY ACT MAY BE REWORDED, OBSERVERS STATE

President Roosevelt's Words on Defence of Canada Weighed

APPLICATION OF ACT

Expert Says That Words Analagous to Munroe Doctrine

Washington, Aug. 20—(AP)—President Roosevelt's declaration that the United States would not stand idly by if Canada were attacked by a foreign power may result in a rewording of the neutrality act.

Informed observers predicted an attempt would be made in the next congress to insert Canada among the nations exempt from application to the act which gives the President power to declare United States neutrality when a state of war is deemed to exist between foreign nations.

Neutrality Act Clause

Section four of the act excerpts the American Republics. It says: "This act shall not apply to an American Republic or republics engaged in war against a non-American state or states, unless the American republic is not cooperating with non-American state or states in such war."

Officials say that because Canada was not included in the term American republics it may have to be mentioned specifically. This would be a logical consequence of President Roosevelt's reservation with regard to the dominion some observers believe.

Hearings before the Senate and House Foreign Affairs Committees while the report naturally that was in preparation disclosed a considerable opinion in favor of giving special consideration to Canada with regard to neutrality policy.

Some observers pointed to the neutrality law on the grounds it might cut off United States trade with Canada if Great Britain were involved in war.

Secretary of State Hull is refusing to be drawn into a discussion as to whether President Roosevelt's declaration was an extension of the Monroe doctrine to Canada. The President said at a press conference he did not have that idea in mind when he made his address.

Some observers said the effect would be the same. An international league expert close to the State Department said the President's declaration was "tremendous" to the Monroe doctrine.

Observers added that, at any rate, the President had stated for the first time in many years, that the United States would come to Canada's assistance if she were attacked.

Time is Aptly Chosen To Warn Aggressive States U. S. Sympathy With Order

—New York Times Editorial

New York, Aug. 20 (CP)—The New York Times in an editorial this morning editorially today on President Roosevelt's address at Kingston, Ont., said it was not so much what the President said that was significant but that he chose the present moment to make the statement of dissatisfied and aggressive nations that interests of the Dominion of Canada are also frontiers."

The paper said it must be clear to democracies of the world that the United States is emerging from its isolation and that it is moving toward acceptance of responsibilities of a great world power.

Authority of Tradition

Said The Times:

"When President Roosevelt said in his address at Kingston that "the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canada or of Canada's soil by any other empire" he did no go beyond the long-established line of our position.

"What the President said at Kingston was not said on the authority of the Constitution of the United States country and the inescapable facts of its geographical position.

Proper Moment Is Chosen

"The significance of the President's statement, therefore, is not that he has put into words something that has been known for a long time by Americans themselves, by Canadians and by the Government of all foreign powers, but that he has chosen this moment to do so. Plainly his Kingston address, like the address of Secretary Hull a few days ago, was intended to serve as an American contribution to the solution of the European crisis which is now coming to a head.

"It was intended to warn the dissatisfied, the discontented and aggressive nations that the interests of the United States transcend its frontiers, that we have a deep and abiding interest in the maintenance of international law and the preservation of the democratic system of government. On the other side, against self-defence and aggression, on the other, the American people are certain to choose sides. The President definitely warned the aggressor nations.

"It must be clear to the democracies of the world that the United States is emerging from the isolation in which it puts its faith in the standards of the past and that it is feeling its way toward the acceptance of those responsibilities which fall naturally to a great world power."

Heavy Toll of Life And Property in Early Morning Clash

FIGHT IN STREETS

Hebron Occupied by British Previous to Fall of Jerusalem in 1917

Jerusalem, Aug. 20—(CP-Havas)—Hundreds of Arabs today invaded the ancient town of Hebron, burned the post office and the Barclay's Bank building and engaged in a severe fight with British troops.

Fighting began shortly before midnight continued into the morning. Eighty tanks went into action with hundreds of soldiers and aircraft.

It was the largest combat in the week of Palestine disorders that has claimed a heavy toll in life and property during the past few months.

Systematic Attack

The Arabs seemed to have planned their attack systematically, looting and burning many buildings in the heart of the town.

Flames leaped from the Barclay's Bank structure. After disarming guards, they set fire to the building, which was razed.

The post office met the same fate. Arabs also set upon the home of the assistant police inspector, killed the guard and set fire to it.

Meanwhile a large body of terrorists attacked police headquarters, where they obtained ammunition and guns.

An armored police car, rushed to the scene of the disorders, was destroyed by the Arabs who killed its driver.

Fight in Streets

Fighting followed in the city's streets as British troops in Hebron area. No time was lost in getting British troops to the historic city. Hebron is only 21 miles southwest of Jerusalem.

Agreement Ends Friction Between Catholic Action Fascism and

Rome, Aug. 20—(AP)— The Fascist party today announced an agreement ending the recently growing friction between Fascism and Catholic Action, lay organization of the Catholic Church.

The Fascist party bulletin said that at a conference between Achille Starace, Fascist party secretary, and Marquess Lamberto Vigrelli, President of the Italian Catholic Actipns central office, an agreement had been reached "to conform to the" accords reached in 1931."

The 1931 accords ended an earlier dispute between Fascism and Catholic Action. The settlement that year, permitted Catholic action to function in Italy but limited its scope to purely religious and spiritual matters.

Catholic action has been under attack recently by a part of the Fascist press.

The announcement said the British ambassador, Sir Nevile Henderson, had been requested to see that Captain Kendrick leave Germany at the earliest possible moment.

Wanted to Save Boy from Fate of Brother So Chained Him in Yard

Sudbury, Ont., Aug. 20.—(CP)— A boy chained in the yard when his eldest son was killed three years ago, told Coroner Roy Watts he was playing in the street, so the parents pinned their hopes to the younger brother. Then he was chained also, the parents said today, explaining why they occasionally chained him by the ankle to a heavy timber in their back yard.

But there was not the first class student his brother had showed promise of becoming. The family was poorer and he would stay away from school, playing in the street and breaking windows, the father said today in broken English while his wife stood in the gaps of speech.

"There is no place for Peter to boy said.

play but in the street, and I don't want that," he added. "I tell him to keep him home, for we were afraid he might get into an accident like his brother. But Peter doesn't do what he is told, so I had to chain him in the yard. This neighbors thought is cruel, but if a boy won't do what he is told, I have to do something."

Police released the boy from the chain in the yard after a neighbor complained. The boy said his father chained him because he broke windows and attached him by a heavy chain to a heavy timber.

It was the third time he was punished in this way.

HOMES READY FOR NEWCOMERS, WORK PROVIDED

Italy Plans Eventually to Settle Millions in Possessions

FARM COLONIES

Groups Will Go to Country Organized in Fascist Concept

By EDWARD KENNEDY

Rome Aug. 20 (AP)—A vanguard of 20,000 of the millions Italy plans eventually to settle in her overseas possessions will cross the Mediterranean in October to found new homes and work in agricultural colonies in Libya.

Unlike thousands who poured out of Italy in former times to seek a living abroad, they will go not as an organized group disciplined in the Fascist concept—as humble immigrants hunting work among strange peoples whose language they do not speak.

Find Homes Ready.

When they arrive in North Africa, they will find homes, stables and irrigation wells constructed and waiting for them. Their job will be to work the newly irrigated soil and harvest the crops. They will plough the land out of the expected harvests of many years.

The agricultural colonies to be opened this autumn are scattered throughout Libya wherever oil experts thought the desert was easiest to reclaim.

The 20,000 represent only 1,000 families. Large families, with many hands, are most desirable to help on the farms, were chosen.

Libya Is Large Country.

Fascists are proud of Italy's new emigration policy. It fosters repatriation instead of the native flag in the Italian Empire's colonies. Emigration to foreign countries is prohibited now, except in special cases.

RECKLESS DRIVING CHARGE IS LAID

Failing to observe a horse-drawn wagon before him at an intersection driven by J. Kurcsaba, New York City, collided with a wagon being driven by Howard Marcelo, Deseronto, two miles west of that village on Highway No. 2 last evening. The wagon was badly damaged but Mr. Marcelo escaped serious injury in the collision.

Kurcsaba was taken into custody by Motorcycle Patrolman Van Slyke and Jack Hazard and arraigned before Justice of the Peace McKenzie, Deseronto, this morning. An hour of the time of the accident charged with reckless driving. The accused was released on a cash bond to appear in police court next Thursday.

The front of the automobile was damaged with the mudguard, radiator, springs, box and tongue of the wagon were all badly damaged after the collision.

GENEROUS RESPONSE TO FIREMEN'S APPEAL

Generous response to an appeal for a stove for a needy family delivered of this home recently through loss of the breadwinner's job a few weeks ago, was made by a big-hearted Belleville citizen. Fire Chief William Lynch stated today. A few days ago the appeal appeared in The Ontario Intelligencer, no less than three offers of stoves and other household goods were sent to the Fire Department.

Fire Chief Lynch this morning expressed the grateful appreciation of himself and the little family for this splendid response by a public citizen.

SQUASH BUGS RAID CITY GARDEN PLOTS

Squash bugs of a new variety have become the latest worry to gardeners of the city. Flat and of dark color, the insects are reported raiding gardens in such heavy numbers as to almost cover the squash upon which they feed. Apparently they defy ordinary methods so deadly to other common garden insects. "My garden is so full of them they cover the squash so thickly that you can hardly see the vegetable," stated ex-Mayor G. A. Bennett, Dundas street.

CROWE LAKE BEACH SOLD TO OSHAWA MAN

It is announced that Mr. Vernon Caverley of Oshawa has purchased 141 acres of land along the north and east side of Crowe Lake, from Wilkins and Sons of Farnham, Que. The newly acquired property has nearly one mile of shore line starting at the concession line just east of the cottages at present erected on the north shore, and extending around the east end of the lake, then down the east shore of Crowe River nearly one-quarter mile. In front of the property there is a smooth sand beach. Mr. Caverley has stated his intention of clearing up the property and disposing of a number of sites for summer cottages.

HEAVY STOCK OF MARKET PRODUCE ATTRACTS BUYERS

Tomatoes, Corn, Head Fine Vegetable and Fruit Display

EGGS FIRM

Ripe red tomatoes, fresh from the fields and gardens of the district, shot to a new seasonal low at the city market today as vendors offered abundant stocks to a slightly sluggish buying reaction at 10 and 15 cents for basket lots and 40 and 50 cents per bushel.

The vivid scarlet of the tomatoes added a bright dash of red to an otherwise colorful display of garden, dairy and farm produce that equalled any seen this year for quality and quantity. The fact that farmers of the district are "up to their ears" in harvest work appears to have but little effect on the splendid offerings of produce that appear on the city market at this time of the year.

Corn Plentiful"

Sweet corn, featuring in the main the Yellow Bantam variety was plentiful but the price for the staple is briskly buying public at 10 cents per dozen ears. A large quantity it was available at three dozen ears for 25 cents.

New potatoes offered in bushel and peck lots were offered at 50 and 60 cents each for the former, while pecks were quoted at 15 cents each. Giant cabbage and cauliflowers reached to the buying public and moved sharply at from 10 cents per head. New round pumpkin, so far offered in spots selling at from 15 cents to 25 cents. Vegetable marrow was quoted at 10 cents each. Onions, beets, carrots and other stock selling at temperatures moved well at all-week prices.

"Cabbage In All Sizes

Cucumbers in all sizes and shapes were plentiful today with pickling cukes" offered at 35 and 40 cents per basket with the table variety selling at 12 and 15 cents per dozen. Pickling among were quoted at 15 cents per quart.

Imported peaches and plums were fairly plentiful today with the former selling at 40 and 50 cents for good quality fruit while the Burbanks were offered at 45 cents per bushel.

Watermelons in varying sizes were offered in spots with cooking apples demanding different prices. High and low quotations were made at 25 and 50 cents. Canteloupe was offered and could be purchased at from 10 cents each to three for 25 cents.

Duchess apples were quoted at 80 cents and at 90 per bushel with Yellow Transparents selling at the same prices. Other pre-cooking apples were offered at 75 and 80 cents per hamper-lot.

Eggs Steady.

Egg prices remained steady in the Belleville market where vendors asked 27 and 28 cents for "A" selects with medium selling at 24 and 25 cents. A few pullets were quoted at 22 cents with some ungraded stock selling at 20 cents per dozen.

Rhine in Swiss Territory

At Diepoldsau the Rhine lies within Swiss territory and good opportunities for escapement are found in thick groves.

Small groups of three or four Jews at first began entering Switzerland illegally. Then there were 20 to 50 in a band. When 64 successfully entered Wednesday night, the Swiss acted to increase the guards.

Some Jews have crossed the line by jumping from trains which barely crawl along the border near Buchs. Only a few hate valid travel papers. Some have British certificates only.

They have arrived in Switzerland practically penniless. A few have had a piece or two of clothing stuffed into pockets or knapsacks.

Practically Without Money

In most cases the 10 marks (4s) permitted by Nazi law is their only money. Authorities said those caught did not try to resist but "as soon as they saw Swiss uniforms threw themselves at the border guards and shouted for joy at such assurance that they were on Swiss soil."

The officials reported hearing many babbled accounts of ill treatment in Vienna.

Although the Swiss have taken measures to stop illegal entry, those who have succeeded hitherto in crossing the frontier are being permitted to remain temporarily.

With Germany behind them, the refugees talk of emigrating farther —to France, Great Britain, the United States if possible.

Mr. Hepburn argued that Ontario did not need the electric power contemplated by the treaty draft and that Canadian railroads would be hurt by the waterways.

Ontario And Power Supply

At the State Department it was believed Ontario probably would begin to need more power about 1941 or 1942, and the waterway-power project under discussion could not be completed in less than seven years. President Roosevelt was believed to have anticipated Premier Hepburn's objection when he said in his speech Thursday that waterways actually conducted more business for the railroads.

She had two sons, David and Charits, who passed away in early manhood. They were studying for doctors at Queen's University, Kingston. She leaves one daughter, Margaret, with whom she lived, and one brother, Mr. Joshua A. Lloyd Brantford, in his 81st year. Her family all were born in Roslin where they lived for many years. Her husband predeceased her a number of years ago. They are buried at Carnduff, Sask.

Prompt Action Taken by Police

Only the prompt action of the Belleville police prevented a Belleville woman from possibly committing suicide on the government dock last evening. Sergeant Arthur Hall and Const. Doug Ellis effected that a local woman was enroute to the government dock and in a serious state of mind, obviously under a nervous breakdown.

Sergeant Hall and Doug Ellis hastened to the dock but found no sign of such a person upon his arrival. He then proceeded to the home of the woman and spoke to her.

It was during this time that the woman was attended by Dr. R. Bird who ordered that she be taken to Belleville General Hospital. "The woman is in a very nervous and hysterical state and will be under observation for some time," stated Dr. Bird, after examination.

Baron von Trutzschler Has Large Dairy Farm in Chester

Said to have left his native Germany because of the taxes imposed on farmers by the Nazi regime, Baron Von Trutzschler, former member of the German Agricultural party arrived in this district recently for the purpose of purchasing three hundred head of cattle to stock his recently purchased farms in England.

His farm situated near Chester, England is one of the finest types of dairy farms in the district, modern city, and boasts a milch herd of from six hundred to two hundred and fifty head of dairy cattle. Four hundred sheep and one thousand hogs are part of the remainder of the farm's livestock. No grain is raised on the baron's rolling acres.

Like many of the farmers in his district Baron Von Trutzschler manufactures his cheese on the premises. A nearby neighbor has installed an automatic milker that weighs the milk and passes it through tubes to the cheese factory.

The baron speaks excellent English and Dutch. His wife who is with him not greatly impressed with Canada.

Holstein cattle federally tested and approved that will not freshen until after the shipment arrives in England, are the type desired by the Baron. The shipment that leaves in October, will be the second he has made within the year.

Letters to the Editor

DECORATE

Dear Sir: Our Belleville Fair will open on August 30 and will continue for four days. During that time thousands of visitors will view the displays of farmers, merchants and manufacturers which will be exhibited in the agricultural grounds and in the buildings. This Fair has grown until it is now one of the best, if not the best, in Eastern Ontario. This has not been accomplished by easy methods but by hard and energetic work on the part of the members of the Board and they should be congratulated on the success of the Fair.

Should we citizens of Belleville not show our appreciation by

(1) Attending the Fair. We can go up once or twice and by going we are boosting our own city.

(2) Why not decorate? Our covered street lights are very nice but there is nothing nicer than bunting and the old Union Jack.

Let me appeal to the Mayor and Council to decorate the City Hall.

To the Utility Commission to decorate their office.

To the Y.M.C.A. Hitler, to decorate your office.

And may I appeal to every merchant and business man to decorate his or her place of business and every citizen to at least hang a flag outside their home. By doing honor to the thousands that come into our city in these four days we are being honor to the city and ourselves.

I hope, Mr. Editor, that you will publish this and that every citizen will do something towards making our city gay and beautiful for at least these four days.

Thanking you for the space, I am

Yours very truly,
ONE WHO WILL DECORATE.

Cheesemakers, Instructors Try Through Meeting to Better Quality of Cheese in District

Clear Up Knotty Problems Bothering Makers Recently

LARGE ATTENDANCE

Every Angle of The Production of Cheese Discussed

Cheesemakers and instructors of the County of Prince Edward in a determined effort to better the quality of admittedly inferior cheese made in this central section, later were responsible last evening for one of the largest and most successful meetings of cheesemakers of the Central Ontario district held in this city recently.

Held in the commodious warehouse of James Cook, Albion street, accommodations of the building were taxed to care for the large attendance of makers, instructors and officials from throughout the Central Ontario district. Presided over by Wm. F. Henderson of Cressy, Prince Edward County, the meeting had as its chief guest Dr. A. L. Gibson, superintendent of the Eastern Ontario Dairy School, Kemptville, assisted by James Irwin, Dominion Dairy Grader of the local office and instructors from throughout the various districts.

Dr. A. L. Gibson Reviews Industry.

Declaring his presence to be only for the purpose of being called on any knotty angles of the industry which may have been bothering the makers recently, Dr. Gibson gave a resume of the situation as it at present affects local and overseas markets and generalized upon needed improvements that must be put into effect if the industry is to long to survive present day competition. "Cheesemakers pay more attention to their work. They must improve the quality. They must make better cheese if they are to continue at all," Dr. Gibson impressed. "There is no room for anything today for slip shod workers or careless workmen."

Though not a new aid to the industry, the use of methylene blue for tests has always increasing popularity recently, it was pointed out by the Eastern Dairy School head, and several instances where it had been employed to trace defective ingredients for the making of cheese and explaining the case with which milk could be tested with this developed chemical.

No angles of the industry in this district were left unexplored by Dr. Gibson who invited his listeners to forward any question they might have on any difficulty experienced.

Mixed Feeding Recommended.

The matter of alfalfa, and whether this feed would result in "sweet" milk, brought up by Geo. Sherrill, Consecon, Mr. Stonehouse, Prince Edward County revealed that no direct evidence had ever been secured that any particular forage feed had ever resulted in acidity or gas in the milk.

"There have been fads in feeding some but the same is anything else," pointed out the expert. "One year nearly every farmer was found feeding his cows sweet clover. There was a lot of trouble that year with cheese due to such factors, and everyone was prone to blame it on the clover feed. This was not the case, however. Now we have many things mitigating against the industry, the same as there are this year.

"I don't believe it is right for any person to give his cows any kind of feed such as clover or alfalfa. They require a mixed diet; it wouldn't be right for any of us to depend upon a single item, such as meat day after day. As far as the matter of acidity through feeding cows sweet clover, we have had cows practically belly deep in clover at the O.A.C. eating nothing else but that, and harmful taste for acidity taken them of the best men in my district was bothered with a condition he didn't understand, until we finally cleaned out his pipes and ended the trouble.

"Another thing," pointed out the Deseronto instructor, "there is no use in putting pasteurized whey in dirty tanks. That is another reason for trouble."

Good Finish Spells Difference.

The matter of neglecting the finish on cheese when but a comparative few minutes spelled the difference between good cheese and poor was one which was not understood by Mr. Brennan, he added. "For the life of me I can't see why they neglect this vital point. A farmer will spend more time dressing a $1.50 chicken so it will look good on the market, than a cheesemaker will spend on a $15.00 cheese. That is the literal truth. And yet, buyers would prefer an inferior cheese, if the finish was good."

A strong solution of lye left in the pipes overnight, and then a thorough-cleansing out with live steam next morning was given by Mr. Moore, instructor, as the best recipe for whey pipe trouble.

Polluted Water Was Cause

Mr. S. H. McNeil, instructor of Moscow, admitted that his group lately had not been doing so well in the matter of making good cheese. "We had one shipment turned down one week. Pronounced one of my best makers," he confided. A methylene test showed that we were getting milk from patrons which would stand up hardly an hour. We took whey pipes apart. We examined all factors which might present good cheese making. Then we found the trouble. We found that this good maker had been using water from a little river to clean his factory with. This water flowed down from a section in which numbers of pigs were kept. This was the trouble, and it was remedied. That maker never before had grades less than ninety, and he couldn't understand what the trouble was. In every case of poor cheese you'll find some condition like this responsible. The good cheesemaker will make good cheese if he is given the chance, and has the material with which to make it, but the poor maker, as ever, is still responsible for the trouble of the better ones," reminded Mr. McNeil.

Mr. W. R. McCrory, local buyer, paying tribute to Mr. Cook, and his untiring efforts to improve the industry at all times, declared the meeting could not have been held in a better place than Cook's warehouse, the centre of better cheese.

Buyers Demand Good Finish

"The matter of poor finish and faulty rinds on cheese were dealt with by Mr. McCreary who impressed that a cheese with good finish was one that was half sold before it left the factory. So necessary is the matter of finish to the buyer that in many cases he would be willing to accept cheese of a lower grade with a well prepared surface, than the best cheese made with a finish which did not come up to standard, "and you can't cook the bandages on too tightly," declared Mr. McCreary.

"The one which needs scraping off is a preservative, one which is very beneficial. The poor one causes cracked rinds, and no buyer wants that kind of cheese."

Mould on cheese was declared the next greatest evil.

"One factory in Napanee district has lost just about $500 during the past month by mould on cheese. That factory can't stand it any more than any other factory. Yet, unless cheese makers get better, unless makers really buckle down to the job, buyers are going to refuse to take the cheese for which there is a market," warned Mr. McCreary.

Geo. Pollard, instructor of Quinte district, extended his congratulations to the makers of Prince Edward County for managing such a successful meeting as last evening's. "The only trouble, is the careless beggar who really needs to attend such a meeting is not here. The better makers can always be spotted because they are the ones who are always meeting, exchange opinions and ideas and really try to learn something more of their job all the time," he said.

Cleanliness Essential Detail

Mr. Pat Murphy, buyer, and former maker of Enterprise, warned of the need for cleanliness in every detail connected with the making of cheese. Makers perhaps do not spend the time, nor exhibit the interest shown in the earlier days of making. Too many counter attractions away from the factory in present times have been responsible, it was believed by him. Unclean utensils, unclean vats and containers, unwashed cans and rags often stuffed in the bottom of cheese vats, he warned, have been found the greatest source of trouble than all other factors combined, he related. "And such things as I have encountered, have actually been found on farms we visited this winter," he assured. We found this condition on two of the farms. And these patrons were responsible for all the trouble until this particular maker was having.

The "blue test" (methylene test) was one of the best helpers this maker has had for the tracing down of trouble, said Mr. Murphy.

Found Time For Good Work.

In the matter of finish, some makers were prone to forget that this was half the battle in making good cheese, also stated by the speaker.

"In the old days we always found time to do this part of the work right. When I made cheese we always had time to take them out of the hoops and if there were any defects, that is the time we found them. Makers can't spend too much time on such important work as the finish of the cheese they want to sell. And buyers can't be blamed for refusing to buy cheese with a poor finish.

LUTHERAN PASTOR ADMITS MURDER

"Devil Overcame Me", He Says, "I Did Wrong"

Mandon, N.D., Aug. 19.—(AP)—Rev. Helo Janssen, Evangelical Lutheran pastor of Krun, began a life prison sentence today a few hours after pleading guilty to poisoning his 16-year-old housemaid and firing the parsonage containing her body.

The Minister, 51, admitted he killed Alma Kruckenberg, because she was pregnant. District Judge Lee I. Berry sentenced Janssen at a special Court session shortly after midnight.

The arraignment came after Janssen signed a statement admitting he committed the crime, Monday, and burned his fire-proofed house that night.

"The devil overcame me," the pastor said impassively. "I did wrong."

After looking at the pictures in the folder, hearing about all the doings the hikes and picnics, the swimming and boating, Alfred was, at first, all for the idea.

But later he grew more than "sour" on the subject. Moping about in the house, he was a sad sight over and over, "when do I have to go?"

"In about a week," Mother said cheerfully. "My! How Father and I envy you the woods at this time of year!"

Thinks He's Burden

If Mother had turned to look, she might have seen by Alfred's expression, that he considered himself and his lot quite unworthy of envy. But Mother was still wholly without suspicion.

At last, one day Mother, grown somewhat impatient at Alfred's continual moping about the house, suggested, perhaps a little sharply, that he go out for a walk.

Then the surprise. Alfred with tears in his eyes turned to her and said: "Maybe they'll find me too much of a nuisance at the camp, too, and send me home. Then what will you do?"

Mother dropped what she was doing and went into the matter.

Didn't Want Him?

It appeared that Alfred having been away from school a long time, now suspected that perhaps Mother and Father did not want him around any more. They had decided to get rid of him he believed. They didn't love him any more. And having arrived at this conclusion, everything Mother and Father did seemed to support the unpleasant misconceptions in Alfred's mind.

It's better for a healthy boy to stand a summer in the city than to nourish the idea that his own parents want to get rid of him, that he did not really have a home at all.

We all and children especially, must feel we are loved somewhere. A well-adjusted boy can stand being away from home a good deal, if necessary, so long as he feels he always has a home to come back to, a home where he is wanted and always welcome.

It's not good to "gush" over a child or smother him with demonstrations of affection. But every child needs to feel sure of his parents' love.

LIFE ALONG THE ST. LAWRENCE

His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Albert Matthews of the Province of Ontario had one of the finest tributes to peace as it is experienced in the English-speaking world and to the great St. Lawrence River, one of the chief waterways of the world, in his speech on Thursday at the opening of the Thousand Island bridge. His address was couched in the following words—

"As His Majesty's representative in the Province of Ontario, I join with you today in these proceedings with a deep sense of gratitude to the Father of all, that here on this continent of common sense, we are blessed beyond measure with every gift that the heart of man can desire. Not the least of these gifts is this mighty waterway with its five great fresh-water seas — a waterway that from the head of Lake Superior to the Gulf of St. Lawrence enriches the lives of millions, and gladdens the heart of man with its matchless scenery. It is a boundless storehouse of food; it supplies us with the purest drinking water in the world; it lights the homes of millions in city and town and village and farm; turns the wheels of industry, and bears up our keels of commerce, and carries the products of our farms, our factories, our forests and our mines, to the Atlantic Ocean for distribution to the markets of the world.

"With the history of this noble river is entwined the life story of the struggles and sufferings and achievements of our pioneer forefathers, of our progress in the development of this continent, and of those continued happy relations which have enabled our streams of destiny to flow side by side in the ways of peace."

Such is a picture of life in this part of Canada and in the adjacent part of the United States. The words convey reality to the people who dwell along the Great Lakes system and the mighty artery through the mystic river which flows from the Great Lakes system down to the ocean.

WAR GAMES' COST

Is it possible that the great mobilization of the armed might of Germany now called for the war games may turn the tide against war? A writer in the New York Times offers a suggestion when he says that while so far only 300,000 reservists in addition to the standing army of about 1,000,000 have been called to the colors, Germany feels this test mobilization as an economic strain on the country. He says: "It is inserted that a war scare caused by these military games seems to have scared Germany more effectively than any other country."

He sees this in the slump of German stocks. Then he goes on to speak of the fact that "it is rather ironic that the first large scale test of war strength reveals how thin are the economic margins on which the great military machine works. Germany seems to be pinched even for a rehersal of war."

Stabilization of German industry has been upset by the conscription of half a million workers and much vital raw material, resulting in the crippling of other lines. The release of other hundreds of thousands for a month's manoeuvres, the strain of supplies, transport and equipment for this army, mean an added strain on German economy, already stretched to the utmost by the abnormal requirements of the four-year plan of self-sufficiency.

While the war games constitute a demonstration as much to Germany as to the outside world, this does not mean that the military machine will be stalled or the military economy break down. He says: "The system under complete central control can keep pounding along on two cylinders for a long time." At the close of the editorial the writer asks: "If the cost of mobilization weighs so palpably on German economy, what about the cost of war?"

READING SPEECHES

Speaker of the New South Wales Legislature has stopped members reading their speeches for the reason he said that there are persons outside the legislature willing to write members' speeches on any bill for ten shillings each, and because this would save members from writing for themselves.

Another reason why the Speaker might have objected also to read speeches, even if written by the speakers themselves, is that these might be so lengthy as to lose all pretence of oratory and of interest to the legislators and people.

On the other hand one can understand a speech on a momentous issue by a member of the government being written in the best interests of clearness and conciseness, even if some such speeches do run to length.

No one would prevent a speaker from using notes for the sake of accuracy and conciseness.

And then what of the member who is not a first class speaker and who is not at ease in speaking to a House? There are some members of this class. May he read his own

THE NOVICE

Nature's tapestry in words
Woven is within my rhyme;
And the rhapsody is truth,
For my faith in her design.

I have seen a feathered spruce
Bend its boughs in slow caress
Of an ardent, dimpled snow
In an alabaster dress.

I have seen the goldenrod
Shimmer in September's haze.
I have seen a rising sun
Make the opal fires blaze.

I have seen a yeaming birch
Reach to kiss the smiling sun.
I have drunk the liquid peace
Of a robin's evening song.

Oh! I've heard the glory-hymn
In the surf's deep bosso croon,
But I've felt an ancient spell
In the brilliance of the moon.

For there's heresy in faith,
Of a pregnant night in June,
When small figures seem to skip
To the measure of a tune.

So, till I am orthodox,
I will pass to haunts of men,
Leaving pixies deep in rocks
And the haunting strains of Pan.

Dear Sir — I am preparing some of Midland's early history around the inception and completion of the old Midland Railway from Port Hope to Midland, 1871-79 . . . I would be pleased to receive anything along this line . . . My father, the late A. C. Osborne, taught school in Napanee, and his home was in Prince Edward County. sought admission to Belleville City Hall Wednesday afternoon and were surprised to find that the City Hall and most of the business places were taking a summer half holiday. They were seeking information regarding an ancestor named Gomes, who they understood, had been chief of police here away back when — having previously been an officer in the Imperial army and a veteran of the Crimea. His body is buried in the cemetery in or near Belleville.

BUFFALO BILL CODY WAS A BOHEMIAN

that is he was a mixer, and whenever he returned to his home town of Cody, Wyoming, there was a bigger crowd waiting for him in the saloons than ever followed a brewery collector round in the good old days B. P. On one visit Bill bucked the tiger over the principal saloon and won two thousand dollars the first day he lit into town. He walked right down to the bar, threw the money on the mahogany and said there it is, two grand, drink it up. Did the bar flies rally to that invitation? They did and that saloon never closed its doors for a week until the last two bits was spent. Bill was a real entertainer anyhow, you think I made a pile out of those drunks—oh Yeah? They were the best bunch of bookkeepers you ever saw. Every round of drinks, cigars, sandwiches, went down on paper, duplicates and triple entry, for they had three educated bums keeping tally and they got every cent's worth of that two thousand dollars, believe you me. My old friend "The Old Trouper" told me this story, believe it or not, Bob Ripley.

Colonic Irrigations, Washing out of the Lower Bowel

While there may not be as many individuals receiving colon (large bowel) irrigations as formerly physicians who are using this treatment to remove organisms and their products and to stimulate normal action of the bowel are reporting great success with this treatment.

A colon or colonic irrigation means a washing out of the lining of the colon or large bowel in the most often called.

The difference between an enema and a colonic irrigation is given in an article by Dr. James W. Whitaker of Washington, D.C. in Clinical Medicine and Surgery:

"In medicine the term irrigation conveys the idea of washing; therefore while the ordinary enema is given with the purpose of inducing defecation (causing the bowel to empty itself), the irrigation is administered, not to cause the bowel, but to wash out waste material on matism or arthritis and the walls farther up than the last disorders.

few inches of the bowel where the usual amount of enema fluid is retained. Also, to wash the wall of the bowel itself as high as the water can be made to reach."

The enema because the water has to go up but a short distance into the bowel is usually given with the patient sitting on the toilet or in a half sitting and half lying position in bed . No more than a quart of water or solution should be given at one time in an enema. Irrigations, on the other hand send the water or solution up the entire distance of the lower bowel (six or more feet) and two to three gallons of water may be used.

The proper method of giving the irrigation is outlined by Dr. Whitaker, the number of times they should be given to any patient, the temperature of the water or solution and other details.

Now colonic irrigations are not given by everybody on general principles but for definite conditions where there is some excessive mucous inflammation or ulceration, waste matter retained in the bowel, a specific condition where bowel is contracted in one part and expanded in another (as in the sac of inner tube of a tire.

The main purpose of the irrigations is to soften the waste matter, removal of organisms and poisons which had come originally from other parts of the body—teeth, tonsils, sinuses, gall bladder—and then followed by frequent bowel movements or by colonic irrigations would continue to get into the blood stream and cause further attacks of rheu-

The Bishop of Ontario

by

O. R. ROWLEY

In The Canadian Churchman

High up on the list of Ontario's famous sons stands the name of the first Bishop of Ontario, the fifth and present Bishop of Ontario. Born on Friday, November 29th, 1878, at Portland, Ontario, on the Rideau Lakes, he is of Irish descent, the elder son of the late Charles and the late Martha (Croskery) Lyons, both of whom were born in Canada. His grandparents on both sides of the house were members of families which came from northern Ireland many years ago, settled in Leeds county, Ontario, and made their homes out of the virgin forest. His father Charles Lyons, carried on a successful saddle and harness business in Portland. His mother, Martha Croskery Lyons, is a lineal descendant of the Croskery family of the late Thomas Croskery of Bedford Mills, Ontario.

The future Bishop was born at an early age attended regularly the Sunday school of Emmanuel Church, Portland, in the Parish of Newboro, began his education at the Portland Public Schools, passed a highly successful examination and entered the High School, graduating from the College of Athens, Ont., from which he graduated in 1895. He then attended the Athens High Model School, not now in existence obtained a teacher's certificate and taught the highest school near Portland. Then followed a course at the Ottawa Normal School, from which he obtained a diploma. As a student he is remembered as exhibiting a complete understanding of everything he put his hand to, and as being a master hand at dealing with every problem which came before him.

In 1900, he joined the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's Mounted Police Force, as private secretary to the auditor of passenger receipts, with the responsibility of the audit department, but the railway business was not to his liking. The call of the good plan, the call to the sacred ministry came to him during one of the long years in which he taught school. The strong religious atmosphere of Emmanuel Church, and the pronounced urge within him, influenced him to the consideration as the highest vocation in life.

In the fall of 1902, at the age of 24, he entered Wycliffe College, Toronto, a college with a broad religious and high standard, where a large number of able and distinguished men have been educated. He worked very hard and took an enviorous reader. In 1906, he graduated with honours in Theology and took his M.A. degree in 1907. In 1932, when elected to the Episcopate, Trinity conferred upon him that of D.D. (pure dignitatis) upon him. For four years he represented the Diocese of Ontario as a member of the Corporation of Trinity College.

On Trinity Sunday (May 26th) 1907, he was ordained to the priesthood of deacon by the Right Rev. W. L. Mills, Bishop of Ontario, who advanced him to the priesthood on Sunday, May 3rd, 1908. Both ordinations took place in Emmanuel Church of St. George, Kingston, Ontario.

In his student days, John Lyons spent one summer in charge of the Church of the Redeemer, Bedford, Canmore in the Diocese of Calgary. On his ordination to the Diocesate of Ontario, he was placed in charge of Clarendon and Palmerston, now known as North Frontenac, comprising the Mission Field in the Diocese of Ontario, and of a parsonage in Sharbot Lake. Here his finances are concerned. For a man without a good share of his qualifications it would be a hard life, not only a hard but an impossible one. To the sacrificial life he came for brave and unselfish service, which for three years he gave with unstinted hand. Then he became rector of Roslin, with outstations at Thomasburg and Ivanhoe, remaining From 1915 to 1917, he was rector of Burrit's Rapids, where a church was built, largely through his efforts and largely paid for during his two years of work. The historic church of St. Elizabethtown was his next move, with outstations at New Dublin, Lyn and outstations at New Dublin, Addison and Ballycane. Under his ministrations, Christ Church, Brockville was equipped, from the altar to the smallest article of furniture, of exceptionally high value, and is now one of the most beautiful churches in Eastern Canada. He also completed and furnished the church at Addison, another gem in the diocese, erected by the late Canon Wright. Christ Church, Lyn became rector of Picton and Rural Dean of Prince Edward, which office for some four years. At Picton he found a busy debt on the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, which through his efforts was refunded and the church and rectory handled, the exterior of the edifice restored, and the rectory entirely redecorated and renovated. In 1927, he was appointed vicar of St. Thomas' Church at Belleville, where his missionary spirit was shown in his efforts to establish a mission. At considerable expense, he re-opened St. Paul's, in the north end of the city, and built and took the erection of a hall for the Belleville mission in the north end of the city. Both missions were merged afterwards in adjoining parishes.

In July, 1931, following four successful years at Belleville, he was appointed rector of the ancient parish of Prescott, Archdeaconry of Frontenac, but his tenure of these two offices was for eight months only.

For a quarter of a century, John Lyons served his entire ministry, either as missionary, vicar, rector, rural dean, or archdeacon in parishes within the diocese in which he was born, raised, ordained and is now Bishop. In the missions of the northern district, in the rural parishes in the central section, and the cities and towns in the eastern and western extremities, he won the esteem and affection of his parishioners, and left a record of faithful and successful service. With a kindly influence extending far beyond parish boundaries, wherever he went, men looked upon him as a man of God and a personal friend. Early in 1932, the Right Rev. Dr. Seagar, Bishop of Ontario was translated to the see of Moosonee, Huron. The Synod of the Diocese of Ontario met at Kingston on February 3rd, when Archdeacon Lyons was elected unanimously to the See of Ontario. Consecrations do not always cast their shadows before them, for the name of the bishop designate had not been mentioned in public as one likely to be elected, nor had he ever thought of or desire for the office. His only purpose he has ever sought is the primacy of service. Yet, in some way the shadow of the mantle seems to have fallen upon his path almost from the beginning of his ministry. Gifts have been predestined to it by his pastoral and administrative ability.

On Easter Tuesday, March 29th, 1932, in Christ Church Cathedral, St. George, Kingston, Ont., where years before he was ordained deacon and priest, he was raised to the Bishops of Ontario have been consecrated, John Lyons, Bishop of Ontario was consecrated a Bishop in the Church of God by the Right Rev. J. C. Roper, Archbishop of Toronto, and Acting Metropolitan of Ontario, assisted by the Bishops of Montreal (Farthing), Ottawa, (Roper), Niagara, (Owen), Huron (Seager) Algoma (Renison) and the same day he was enthroned as Bishop of Ontario (fifth) in the Cathedral Church.

The Diocese of Ontario embraces the county of the Upper St. Lawrence. Principally rural in character, it contains some of the most flourishing agricultural section of the province, the finest fruit belt, when it comes to financially. The cities are small and the towns few, the largest in other dioceses in Ontario. The newly consecrated Bishop took charge at a time, due to a variety of causes, when the financial position was almost critical. Parishes had been too generous, too ambitious in the past, while the depression left many unable to protect the synod's investment or trust funds. By persistent hard work and wise economy, thanks to the cause of the Church, and with great executive capacity of the clergymen of its faithful clerical and lay members, the Diocese of Ontario have reached a substantial reduction in the synod's overdraft, and a surplus of $80,000, being the quota from the diocese to the Restoration Fund. This is a remarkable achievement during the six years of the episcopate of John Lyons. In 1937 the contributions of the laity for objects outside the diocese amounted to $30,000, the largest in the province.

In the past the traditions of Dr. Lyons has been those of a servant of his High Churchman, sound but not extreme, and typical of his training in the Anglo-Catholic and noble conceptions of the relation of the Church to humanity and has spiritual qualities.

Notwithstanding a busy life, devoted to the spiritual welfare of the parishes under his charge, Bishop Lyons has been active in Canada in the Province of Ontario Masonic Fraternity. Ancient Grand House of Bishops of the Church of Canada, Toronto.

In May, 1908, a few weeks after his ordination to the priesthood, Bishop Lyons was married. The gracious and devoted churchwoman who became his wife was Miss Barbara Helena Bolton—almost a life-long friend—the youngest of the daughters of the late W. H. Bolton, a retired gentleman of Portland, Ont. Mrs. Lyons in all ways been most active in the parishes where her husband has ministered as a lady of high refinement and character—an invaluable helpmeet. There are two sons and two daughters.

Bishop Lyons is tall, splendidly proportioned, clear eye, copious gray hair, a frank and winsome personality, a lover of churchly ritual and loyal to the ancient and historic traditions of the Church of England. His thorough practicability—a dominant characteristic in his executive ability, and value—saves. He is a forcible preacher and pre-eminently a pastor—and wonderful in the mission of the Christian Church, summed up by the late Phillips Brooks in Massachusetts, "to bring to the people, the life of God."

FORMER DAYS IN BELLEVILLE ARE RECALLED

Mr. T. H. Wickett of Toronto Pays Visit to City Where He Once Resided

Belleville, August 18, 1938

Editor Ontario Intelligencer:

I am again a visitor in the city and surrounding district and being an Old Timer I naturally took a stroll around and over some Old City of the Bay. How well do I remember the day we decorated the beautifully situated town of Belleville as she was never adorned before, and baptized her and named her "The City of Belleville", "The City of the Bay." What a crowd, what a demonstration! I recall that Hugh Mackinnon was our chief of police and what a ponderous powerful big good-natured chief he was, but withal how jolly if you broke the law. Well, the chief was chairman of sports committee that memorable day, and I recall many names. The Caledonian sports were a leading feature and we had no less contestants than Duncan G. Ross and Donald Dinnie. Ross was then American champion and Dinnie was the World champion and believe it or not the Bellevillians made their champion and had it a bit, when our big chief threw the heavy shoulder stone and the big sledge hammer farther than the champions.

And again as I strolled over the city today I naturally developed a reminiscent mood and once more went back to the names of some of the old business houses, the owners of which were the builders of Belleville, such names as Meyers & Co.; The Glasgow Warehouse (Jas. W. Dimmett); J. B. Hungerford; Hanley and Gibson; Will. Flint Jones; Jas. Cummings (harness); and one (Harness); F. H. Rouse & Co.; Bonnicastle; Emmanuel Haynes; Richard Irvine; and so on, space will not permit.

One can recall the time when Belleville could boast of 26 hotels. The big list was necessary for the big trade with all roads leading to Belleville were one continuous procession, coming by ways, of heavily loaded wagons drawn by strong horses, and those that came by rail had to have places to rest and eat and the long list provided for them. I can recall a partial list of those hotels some of which are still doing business, such as I remember the International, by James Doyle; The Ontario House, by A. Fitzpatrick; The Albion by Jas. McClure (now the Belvidere); The Commercial by Mrs. Kyle (now Kyle sparks); The Hastings by Jimmy Brown; The Queens by Mrs. Cole; The City by Henry Johnson (the boys called him Hank); The Anglo-American by Mrs. Doyle; The Crystal; The Gibson House; The Wood-bine; The Dufferin; The Victoria; The Quinte); The Dominion by Jas. Mackie; The Grand Central by Mrs. Donaldson; The Prince Edward; The Ferry House; The Commercial by Mrs. Mackay; The Clifton by Mrs. Queens, still here, (I knew that popular proprietress, Mrs. Mackay (long deceased) was the proprietor); The Mansion House by Mrs. Fanning; The Coleman House; Doctor's Hotel; The Toronto House (Grace's Hotel); The Western; The Windsor by Jas. Ketcheson and his son Lee.

May I for before closing, name a very partial list of real old timers that were born in Belleville. As I listen in my phonograph inside them thus: The Hon. Billy Bell, Prof. Bell, Jim Parks, Prof. Bell, Jim Brown (foundry), Walker Brothers (Walter and Harry), Corby, Dr. Coleman, Lieut.-Col. W. H. Ponton, and is it not cause for rejoicing that Duncan is still in your midst, and is still at the helm? Then there were Dr. Sheard, Dr. Hope, Dr. Wilson, Dr. Foster, and we can call Louis Wallbridge, W. H. Wallbridge whose intimate friends and relatives called him Will Hank. Then there was Will Wallbridge who is prominent in the lumber business, the firm is known as Shilton, Wallbridge and Ault. If I have left out any names I have but will be very glad to know the very latest from Belleville. I have been informed that Will was instrumental in the promotion of the Belleville Yacht Club, which at one time could boast of a membership of 1,000, and by the way the club was associated with a Belleville Club in Winnipeg that had a membership of 2,000. Now you will note that some of the old names are still prominent in Belleville on the map. I regret that I cannot continue my list of names of old timers, space will not permit and I must say "Au Revoir" to the Bay City, and I can carry away with me many happy and pleasant memories of Belleville, whose citizens are known far and near as progressive people whose hospitality is unbounded.

T. H. Wickett.

TORONTO STOCKS
(Close)

Toronto, Aug. 20 (CP)—Toronto Stock listings finished the week with a strong tone, but in decidedly slow trading. Volume was under the quarter million share mark and the bulk of the action was in the junior golds. Gillies Lake was a feature, trading in heavy volume on a rise of 2 to 3 cents to close around 17.

Waite-Amulet turned over in considerable volume but closed practically unchanged. Noranda and Pend Oreille ruled slightly higher. International Nickel and Hudson Bay were unchanged and Smelters a fraction down.

Preston reacted on a few cents while Macassa and Kirkland Lake Shore and McIntyre posted gains up to 10 cents. Close was a fair ile stronger for Pickle Crow, Sladen, Hard Rock, Madsen and Central Patricia. Wright-Hargreaves and Pioneer sold down a few cents.

Foods, steels and senior o'la held steady to strong. The Canadian Car and Foundry issues were higher by small fractions. Liquors, papers and milling were practically unchanged. Bell Telephone posted a ha'-point gain.

In a dull western oil market prices held steady to strong. Okalta and Imperial added a cent or two each and Peacaba firmed a fraction.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 20—(CP)—Further faint rallying signs were present in today's stock market but rising vigor was lacking in most departments. Motors, Steels, Rubbers and a few rails responded to the quiet bidding with advances of fractions to around a point at the best but these were down from the top at the close. Turnover was 300,000 shares.

European war tension still in evidence overseas as the result of extensive German military maneuvers seemed to inspire cautionary attitude among commercial accounts.

Favored the greater part of the time were Chrysler, General Motors, U.S. Steel Bethlehem, U.S. Rubber, Goodyear, Goodrich, Montgomery Ward, Marshall Field, May, Westinghouse, Allied Chemical, American Telephone, Anaconda, American Smelting, Air Reduction, Santa Fe, N.Y., Central, Great Northern and Texas Corp. Bendix edged into new high territory for the year.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Bigger and Crawford
By Financial Services

The market of late has been quite irregular, strength and weakness interchanging throughout the list. The trend has been sawing back and forth although little progress has been made in either direction. If business is to improve this Fall, as appears entirely likely, the stock market should respond to forward march in to new high territory.

Renewed interest was noted yesterday in the unlisted stocks, under the leadership of National Steel Car and Canadian Car. In connection with National Steel, it is expected that the annual statement for the year ended June 30th, next will be out within a few days and advance estimate have it that the company will show $8.50 a share earned, which would be the second best showing in the history of the company. On an annual basis, the stock is selling at less than 8 times estimated earnings, a comparatively

STRIKE SETTLEMENT PROSPECTS WANE

New Glasgow, N.S., Aug. 20 (CP)—Prospects of early settlement of the strike at Eastern Car Company's foundry here continued to appear waned today as 200 workers remained steadfast in their refusal to accept a compromise wage increase.

The workers, members of a Union affiliated with the committee for industrial organization, walked out Thursday demanding higher wages. Company officials after refusing to negotiate unless work was resumed, made a compromise offer. The offer was rejected today at a meeting last night.

Workers remanded a rale which would net top man $7.30 a shift. Up until the walkout, this rate was $5.96. The company's offer would have netted these workers $4.60 a shift.

Congregation Waits Spirit Of Dead Pastor

Pittsburgh, Aug. 20.—(AP)—Faith in the promise of the dead pastor, of the First Spiritualist Church of Allegheny to "return from the dead" prompted members of his congregation today to plan a vigil for reunion.

Funeral services for the Rev. Joseph Albert Pry, pastor since 1893 of the church in old Allegheny —now Pittsburgh's north side—were held last night, with members of the congregation sat beside her bier waiting for his spirit to appear.

A spiritualist photographer, equipped with an ordinary box camera, focused the lens on the bier in an attempt to photograph "spiritual emanations" hovering over the body.

Dr. George J. Lingenfelt, a member of the congregation, said the images would be composed of ectoplasm, the photographer. The films will not be developed until the "apportioned time" arrives.

Produce Prices Remain Steady

Toronto, Aug. 20. — Unchanged prices ruled on the dull produce market yesterday although butter presented a better tone apparently in view of reports circulating that the West were consigning ship ments to the United Kingdom. According to the Canadian Press however, Winnipeg dealers said that they were not considering shipping to the Old Country, but will if profits can be made. On the other hand a Toronto dealer stated that, according to indications he received it was understood Alberta had consigned 2,000 boxes for shipment overseas. At present the English market is quoted at 120 shillings to 121 shillings for New Zealand finest. Thursday, heavy buying took place in Montreal but this was said to have been speculative.

Mayor Bone Sees National Government As Only Solution

Writes in "The Property Owner" His Views on Present Conditions

In "The Property Owner" last issue, appears an article by Mayor Jamieson Bone of Belleville, the President of the Ontario Property Owners Association. Mayor Bone's article follows in part:

"It appears that no good can be served by association of one kind or another, continuing the practice of passing resolutions, and forwarding copies of same to our governments.

"Chambers of Commerce, Property Owners Associations, Mayors, Builders, Real Estate, Municipal, Electric and dozens of other associations, Banks, trust companies, insurance and other companies; and newspapers of every political shade of opinion, have been recommending for years and years, to do and perform certain things, in order that our country a fit place in which to live, for the average citizen who must earn a living.

After referring to the railway "debacle" which, he says, is still with us and noting that the Hydro is still "in politics", Mayor Bone declares "it is now certain that no relief can be expected from either political party. They are both vote catchers" he declares, and neither intends to do anything to rectify the dismal situation into "which taxes, spending and debt have dragged."

Mr. Bone then turns to the question of a National Government as follows:

"It appears that no good can be served by association of one kind or another, continuing the practice of passing resolutions, and forwarding copies of same to our governments.

Hello, Neighbor!

From Your Hollywood Correspondent
FARLEY FAULKNER

What does it matter if Virginia Davis is held to extra-curricular activities in the vast army of brave cinematic youth who temper despair with hope and encourage the palms of fame in ardent hunger with the food of faith.

Virginia is one of the prettiest extra girls in the fabulous city of Hollywood. Her assets are obvious: beauty, talent, intelligence. Her handicap is that she is 20 years of age, that arbitrarily set state of decrepitude when an extra is thought to be too old to work.

The official casting agency of the studios had dropped her from their lists eleven months ago during a siege of illness. Because her age was 20, she couldn't get back on that list. So she lives on a breadand coffee diet; she accepts the humiliated her senses, dulled by futilities and illness; and because it sustains and is cheap.

This story centers on the personality of Virginia Davis because here is a typical story of courage—a saga, if you will, of a brave and struggle surmounting trouble. A rejoicing Providence has paid her back in worth.

During those eleven hard months she had an unrevealed ace up her sleeve. She could skate, very well for an amateur. One day, a few weeks ago, a general call went out for skaters to work in Sonja Henie's picture, "Breaking the Ice" which features the motion picture debut of Irene Dare, ace-rival of baby Sonja Henie." Virginia applied.

Her heart, she says, was pounding deep organ notes when she stepped onto the ice for her try-out. Bravely she whirled and spinned in front of Director Edward Cline. In her inner self there was but a prayer. She had to make good.

They took her name and said they would do. They asked if she would accept $100 a week for four weeks. This fo a girl who hadn't worked for almost a year.

"I should say I would, yipp," said Virginia. "But I wasn't. I can't understand why I came home to me that this was only a temporary answer to the troubles of myself and the 1,000-odd other girls who dance and do extra work in pictures.

Then something else that has happened to these 3000 made suddenly and crazily idle because of the inexorable law of the films that youth must precominate?

"I don't know what happened to most of them," she states. "Two days later I was in the same boat with me are in this picture. Long ago they decided upon me would be my scope for skaters. So they learned, one way or another. Many have gone home. Others are still idle painfully. The last are the ones I pity most. They're like myself. Oval what I did. I know they must suffer.

"Some who have been thrown in the discard have married, are resigned to happiness. I don't want to imply that they are making the most of a second choice career. But in most film extras put off marriage in the hope of first making something of themselves.

"Extras and chorus girls are perfectly normal in every respect. They have a healthy girl's point of view toward life and marriage. And so long as much as anyone else for a home. But a girl who has tasted of studio life soon finds that an irritating germ has entered her blood stream.

"This germ is ambition. It makes her weary of the sentiment which leads to marriage. 'I'll wait two more years,' she tells herself, then adds several more, I know. It happened to me.'

Virginia Davis is too intelligent to call it a conspiracy—this accepted assumption that a girl is no longer young and desirable when she reaches 26. She merely thinks it unfair. Who can blame her?

"I am sorry now that I didn't escape the glossy veneer from film life when I was 20, take stock of myself and my chances for survival in Hollywood. That would have saved me a lot of trouble."

And so she skated off—a graceful, beautiful creature who, at 26, is at the very height of her physical perfection, is considered too old for the business of extra work!

One of Hollywood's finest pals, between Freddie Bartholomew and Ray Sperry, his stand-in, will reach a climax a couple of months hence when Freddie and her back Ray through college, paying all his expenses.

Millionaire Bartholomew, Freddie's beloved Aunt Clasy, revealed their plan.

"It is Freddie's idea," said Aunt Clasy. "And he intends to go through with it if it is at all possible."

Which is most child stars have to change stand-ins almost yearly because children grow differently in height and weight. Ray has been Freddie's stand-in and pal ever since they shared Dopperield." Freddie's first picture, made four years ago, Ray was a head and shoulders taller. An inch and pound for pound. The young actor today is only an inch taller than his eight-year-old stand-in, while Ray tips the beam three-quarters of a pound more than Freddie. This is the more remarkable since Freddie has grown six inches and 20 pounds in the last year.

Those two boys are pals on and off the set. Freddie got a new pet peckile, he insists upon one for Ray. If Freddie gets a new bicycle Ray also gets one.

Recently a producer of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offered Ray opportunity to appear on the screen. He declined with the comment that rather just be Freddie's stand-in."

The two pals are studying privately in "Listen, Darling." They rarely address each other by their given names. Freddie, Ray is "Gentle Genius" and Ray's name for the young actor is "Freddie Boy."

The longest single speech made by Freddie Bartholomew since the event of sound was recorded for "Girl's School."

It includes a five minute address to students of an exclusive finishing school. It was made by Heather Thatcher, erstwhile London musical comedienne.

Since her arrival in Hollywood, Miss Thatcher has become known as "the mother-hen" of child stars. In this production she plays the role of a teacher of charm.

Exemplifying her stage training and ability to mention entirely from the camera, the actress' performance before the camera covered 450 feet of film without a single error.

So exceptional was her handling of the part that John Ruskin, director of the picture, led the company and staff in a round of hearty applause.

The speech, tinged with humor and satire, was made on the set of Magnolia Hall as a highlight of the exciting preparations for the Senior Prom.

If Mickey Rooney doesn't stop making plans for the future, his appearing in pictures will become just a sideline for him.

Working in "Shadetmates" and "Boys Town" at the present time the boy actor now has four stories in preparation for him.

Aside from the pictures, Mickey has made a few plans for himself. He wants a vacation in Honolulu, and is trying to persuade his family to purchase a fifty foot sloop for the trip.

He has sent his high school credits to the University of California at Los Angeles to determine that institution in September, majoring in English.

He is adding more members to his swing band in expectation of a nation-wide tour. Another fad is writing some special tunes for that tour.

He is taking a course in photography, which he thinks will be helpful when he graduates to the rank of director. He's very serious about becoming a director. He has Louis B. Mayer's promise that he can direct a picture for him when he is twenty-one.

He is conducting practice with his football team, getting his players in shape for next fall. His team plays every Friday night, soon at the Gilmore Stadium, sharing honors with the professional teams.

And now his latest worry has been caused by the "Dead End" boys, who have challenged him to a softball game!

When Signs Fail

By Viva Stingel Eldridge

Jim Hardy's dual personality was a source of much perplexity to his sturdy common sense was ever at war with the fanciful, impulsive side that believed in signs and prided so readily to the guidance of "omens." Jim was the first to run on him into the curio shop where he had purchased the ring, black green lucky stone that he believed had influenced his first big sale, and, what was more, his present introduction to delicate, elusive Sylvia Lane. Since that time Jim's business had prospered, but so far as Sophie was concerned the lucky stone seemed to be unable to do more than effect a casual friendship, and Jim was not satisfied.

Now, as he stood balancing the lucky stone in his fingers, his fancy was busy with something he had read concerning old love signs. "If a girl can be induced to sew a button on a man's garment she will be married to him within a year."

Jim's mother, who was so preoccupied that his mother interrupted her discussion of the repairs being made on the house to inquire anxiously: "You're not sick, are you, Jim?"

Jim's eyes lifted slowly from the sugar-bowl he had been absently regarding. "Why, no, mother, of course not."

Assuming a word to his mother about seeing some of the crowd, he left with his hat and stick and approaching the door with caution that he might see no more than a thin inch and pound for pound. The young actor today is only an inch taller than his eight-year-old stand-in, while Ray tips the beam three-quarters of a pound more than Freddie. This is the more remarkable since Freddie has grown six inches and 20 pounds in the last year.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Your Guest Room

Have you ever spent a night as a guest in your own guest room? It's the best way of finding out just how comfortable it is how adequately it may be said to meet the requirements of a guest.

Many of us have had the bleak experience of being assigned to a guest room that gives the pathetic impression of having been furnished—drawn together in a better description—with cast-off furnishings which apparently were useless in other rooms.

Most hostesses take special pride in making their guest rooms attractive. Luxuries the rooms may have, but a generous share should be empty, and each drawer should be covered with fresh white paper sometimes a padded silk or satin linings are placed in the lower drawers. In one of the small drawers the thoughtful hostess puts a tray with plain and gaily pins of various sizes. In another the bureau may be one or two decorative items (perhaps a vase of flowers) but mainly the top is left uncluttered to provide space for the guest's own toilet articles.

If the room and the budget is large enough there should be a table, lamps for small sofa, with a warm throw and soft cushions for the guest who wishes to take a nap. A movable too there should be a dressingstable, with a really good light from a pair of lamps. Extra space-saving may be on the closet door.

Only no family oddities stored in the closet please. With a minimum of clothes hanging there will be an item of artistic delight pay in color, generously equipped with hangers, shoe-trees, hangers, shoetree skirt and trouser-hangers, hat shelf.

If the guest room hadn't its individual bath-room the hostess has made in the family bathroom a special rack for the guest's towels in the lowest, so that she may get clothes and a shelf for the guest's soap dish drinking glass and toilet articles. On the lodge should be a small scrub-brush or cleaning-cloth for the fuh. In the bathroom should be a box of cleaning tissues, a box of powder puffs, a box of cotton.

On the bedside table should be a shaded light, at good reading-height and a book or two (not antiquated ones!), a current magazine, a carafe on a tray with a small glass and perhaps a spoon a cigarette box with fresh cigarettes, matches, and an ash-tray.

Most hostesses keep on hand now a make-up box (any attractive box will do) with trial-sizes from the five-and-ten cent store, of various beauty aids, hand lotion, shaving cream, and so forth; a comb; an inexpensive toothbrush that can thrown away after a guest has used it; an inexpensive razor.

Other equipment-suggestions are: a comfortable arm chair (this is a must); a table and lamp or a standing lamp by the arm-chair; a straight chair; k clock, preferably an alarm clock, and especially one that can be wound; and that runs; a clothes brush; an electric pad or heating-pad; a writing-desc or table-substitute, with writing materials and stamps; a large waste basket lined with paper and a pair of slippers, for the forgetful or unexpected guest.

The thoughtful hostess also as the final welcoming touch to the room, puts flowers in the vase, a single flower in a ten-cent bud vase will be the right spirit!

Resist the implication of having the motions of hospitality on the guest. Leave her alone. Be more significantly indicate this welcoming sentiment by leaving the room itself express comfort and charm.

Guest Charges Calls

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We have a very comfortable house, and we have only one or two house-guests (this is all we can afford) but we are constantly annoyed by the guest who make long distance (sometimes very long distance) telephone calls and charges them to us. What can I do when this occurs?

Grace

Honestly I don't know! It's a serious problem. I grant, and a guest's persistence in this pitiful practice is only equaled by the boldness of because of the overwhelming charm of the guest . . . or else you strike the form of your question.

Much can and should be, said to the guest. You, of course, have mentioned guest will, after a long distance call find out the charges and arrange to refund the amount.

Complexion, hair and fingernails are dependent upon nutrition; if you feel well and are looking well you had better watch your diet. The finicky eater doesn't look radiant. ## TODAY'S GARDEN-GRAPH

Written by DEAN HALLIDAY
For Central Press Canadian

Lilies need special care during the hot, dry spells of summer. The soil in which they grow should be kept cool and slightly moist. If the lily roots are shaded by the foliage of other plants growing nearby or if they have a mulch cover growing over them it may prove to be beneficial. Failing to feed the lilies stand by themselves in full sun, then the soil about them should be well enriched. Granulated peat, or even grass clippings, will serve.

As shown in the Garden-Graph when cutting lilies for indoor decoration, leave about three inches of stem and its foliage to manufacture food for the bulb. This method of cutting assures large blooms for next year.

If cut back just as the blooms begin to fade, many lilies will produce blooms again later in the season.

The newer dwarf zinnias, now available in a wide variety of colors, are especially desirable to grow in well-drained spots fully exposed to the sun.

For lawns and general garden sprinkling a thorough soaking once a week is better than daily light sprinklings.

Egg Mask, Egg Shampoo Refreshing Treatments

By JULIET SHELBY
Central Press Canadian Home Editor

Soap and water, as well as creams and lotions, are very thorough cleansers for every day use, but to keep the skin delicately smooth and lovely we must indulge in a few special and occasional luxuries.

The muscles of the face need exercise just as any other part of the body, to keep young and supple and these facial masks, massage and your massage movements should be practiced daily.

However, in addition to cleansing and stimulating the pores, there is nothing quite so effective as a facial pack. One pack especially fine for a normal or oily type is the egg pack.

Cleanse the skin thoroughly with a rich creamy lather of soap and water. Rinse quickly and be sure to remove every trace of the soap, then pat dry.

Separate the white from the yolk and beat well. Then pour the two inclined to be harsh.

Apply the egg with the fingertips, which have been cleansed and dipped in alcohol. Cover the face and neck completely. Even the tender skin of throat and arms may be covered, as the egg will be a good dupe for them.

The egg mask may be left on from 10 to 15 minutes, then removed with cool, tepid water. Pat the skin dry and follow with the application of tissue cream using facial massage movements.

You may repeat this treatment about three weeks and you will be pleased with the transparent delicate loveliness of your skin which ordinary cleansing alone could not produce.

An Office Triangle

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 24 years old and acquainted with a man whom I have learned to love. He tells me I'm wonderful and enjoys my society. When I first met him he was engaged, but since then it has been broken off.

We all work in the same place of business—the man, his former fiancee and I—so he sees his old sweetheart frequently. He has told me he wouldn't go through again what he did in the last two years.

We're both great readers and enjoy talking about books; also we talk over business. I would like to get him more than interested in me. How can I?

Daisy

Don't try to rush this man; give him time. Haste has spoiled many a savory dish as well as many a love affair. Time is the greatest of soothing-syrups, if you'll only let it work out its magic. Just go along being friendly and perhaps you'll find that over sometime to a

Accepts Her Invitations, He Never Asks Her Out

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have a wonderful boy friend. See him almost every day and he always makes home with me, but —isn't there always a but!—he never asks to take me out. I want to go walking and ask him to come along, he never refuse, but never asks me to go.

Miss Fairfax, I'm tired of asking him and all the time I'd like to be asked me. A friend of his goes with my boy friend's twin sister, and he frequently asks her to take a walk with him. However I don't like to talk about this matter, as I feel it is none of her affair. What do you think is the trouble.

Jill

You're very sensible my dear, not to talk this matter over with the boy friend's sister. Girls as a rule, talk too much about their affairs to other girls.

Just why every because the young man doesn't ask you to walk with him. Probably he's the type who lets the girl take the initiative. Some men do. You might stop inviting him for a while and see how that works.

Goodnight Stories

By MAX TRELL

KNARF SAID to Hazel: "Now you sit down on this stone for a little while, Hazel— I'll be right back."

"Where are you going?

"I'm going to find the entrance to the Mole family's tunnel. It's in this garden somewhere. I think I see it in front of the bush by the hedge."

Hazel smiled to herself as Knarf slipped quietly off. She was quite sure he wasn't going to find the entrance to the Mole family's tunnel as easily as he thought. She could see him searching up and down along the hedge. After five or six minutes he came back. "The entrance isn't there," he looked as hard as I could," he explained. "Where do you think it is, Hazel?"

"I don't know," she answered. "Why don't you ask somebody?"

"Ask somebody!" he said in surprise. "There isn't anybody to ask. Everybody is asleep. Besides, I don't have to ask anybody. If I keep on looking I'm sure to find it. I think I'll look behind the apple tree. I remember now, Mole families always build the entrance to their tunnels behind apple trees."

"That's strange," she said.

Then he went off again. Hazel was just curling herself up on top of the flat rock for a nap when she heard a little voice saying: "What are you doing in the garden at such an hour, my young lady?"

She sat up suddenly and looked around. No one was there.

"You might look under the rock," the same voice said. It's the usual

So she looked under the rock. There she saw Earthworm, all dressed up in his best suit of clothes with a fine, new derby hat and a walking stick. "Good evening," he said pleasantly. "I'm going for a stroll. Would you care to come along with me? It's a very pleasant evening."

"Oh, thank you very much," Hazel replied, thinking of how curious it was to be talking with a worm. "But I can't go now. I must find out something first. Perhaps you could tell me about it. Where is the entrance to the Mole family's tunnel?"

"Oh, that! Why — dear me! That's just where I was going to stroll to!"

New Tips On Tasks In Home

Method Permits the Light to Pass Through Closed Eyelids

(Housekeeping Helps)

By ELEANOR ROSS

HERE ARE some helpful hints to assist in the vital task of keeping the house fresh and clean. Both questions and answers have been contributed by readers.

One reader wants to have her living room and bedroom nicely scented when she has a party. She can't have a great deal on flowers. A good tip is to place a few drops of good perfume, especially a nice flower odor, on electric light bulbs that are to be used often. It diffuses a delicate odor that is discernible but not too strong.

One reader wants to clean furniture, apply iodine, then ordinary furniture polish. And if you want to change the odors at your can per so that it looks like new, place a few drops of iodine in your can water and rub the carpet with the solution. And kerosene may be helpful in rubbing it with fine wool dipped in kerosene. Ammonia will remove paint from walls and floors.

Add ammonia to water used for washing; apply with a large sponge. Vinegar will remove the ammonia water; the paint will go with it.

Cleaning Wallpaper

Wallpaper may be cleaned with fresh dough, pipeclay or starch put on wet and rubbed off when dry. Varnished paper should first be washed with hot water and soap to remove all dirt. Then polish with a mixture made of sweet oil and vinegar in equal parts that has been warmed in the oven.

There comes a time to all of us when it is necessary to remove some much-needed repairs, such as replacing a washer on a faucet. First, the water must be shut off at the fixture or cellar intake or, for hot water, at the storage tank. Then unscrew the cap nut with a wrench. The cloth between jaws of wrench to prevent scarring of cap nut. Grasp faucet handle and unscrew faucet stem from body of faucet. Remove washer screw at bottom of stem, using screw driver. Replace old washer with new one; replace washer screw, then screw stem back in body of faucet and replace the cap nut. It is a good idea to keep a few washers of the proper size handy. In an emergency, temporary washers may be made from a piece of leather or rubber, using the former on cold water the rubber on hot water faucets.

Favorite Soup Of Opera Star

Menu Kitchen)

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

OUR FAVORITE TENOR is Lauritz Melchior, not only because he is a marvelous singer and actor but because he is such a grand person with a charming wife in general and for good food and essential friends in particular.

Before Mr. Melchior and his pretty wife, "Kletchen," sail for Europe after the opera season ends, they have a standing date with an old family friend who prepares a simple, informal dinner for them. Only two or three of their closest friends are included among the guests, the total number never exceeding eight. Among the dishes that the guest of honor requests is this soup for the dinner.

This year's menu started off with the traditional smorgasbord, including herring salad and caviar spes (served at the buffet before sitting down to eat). This was followed by mushroom soup, then the baked short ribs, then asparagus, fried bass, potato fritters, endive and escarole salad. Baked grapefruit with butter cookies and coffee ensued, then cheese and coffee for dessert.

Recipe for Soup

Mr. Melchoir thought that we should have the recipe for the famed soup. It needs two quarts of water, three meaty soup bones, the wings and giblets of one chicken, half of one large onion, one small bunch celery, one large peeled carrot, one-half cup dried mushrooms, one-half cup coarse barley, one pound soup meat, two teaspoons salt and one-fourth teaspoon pepper.

Put two quarts of boiling water add the bones and then the barley, which has been soaked in cold water for an hour, then boil for half hour. Next add celery and carrots, cook about an hour, then add the soup meat which is delicious with horseradish sauce.

A practical selection for the campus wardrobe is a jacket-blouse and gored skirt in velveteen. This costume is shown in many attractive shades as wine, bunter green and royal blue.

X-Ray Now Found to Be Useful In Checking on Eye Disorders

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

I ALWAYS felt it was an oversight on the part of nature that she did not provide means to allow us to close our ears as we do our eyes. Think of the luxury of closing out all ugly sounds, all the noises of the world. It would certainly promote comfortable sleeping, especially in city hotels, where I have been trying to sleep for the last night or two.

I suppose the street revolutionist would say that it was a protective device to promote the survival of the fittest — that we must have our sons warning to wake the sleeper in case danger is near. So, for the sake of what might possibly happen, we will have to bear the hoot of the midnight motorist in the street below.

Perhaps science would devise some method to overcome that curse, anyhow, as it has to overcome shut eyes.

I was startled to find in a medical journal the other day an article on reading with your eyes shut.

This is not one of those hocus-pocus mediumship stunts, and does not mean that anyone can read with the eyes shut under normal circumstances. It means the use of the X-rays to stimulate the retina.

Of course, the X-rays penetrate the closed eyelids and throw an image on the retina. A film, on which are printed words, is passed between the X-ray tube and the closed eyelids, and the letters can be seen quite clearly.

Has Practical Uses

The idea has practical uses in eye medicine. For instance, in the case of an old cataract, the doctor does not know whether the progressive presence of the opacity has caused atrophy of the retina or not. Eyes do deteriorate from having had cut off from them. The cataract prevents the patient from seeing print or light and the doctor from examining the retina with an ophthalmoscope.

Here the X-ray comes in. It penetrates the eyelid and the cataract and if it is turned on in such an instance and the patient can see light then it known that the retina is intact and removal of the cataract will be followed by a return of vision.

Also in the case of foreign bodies in the eye. Small pieces of steel can penetrate the eyeball and we main inside. When small they may be very difficult to locate, or even their presence at all may be doubtful. If the X-ray is turned on such an object, the removal of these very thing light except the foreign body which will appear as a dark object in the field of vision. By using the metallic grit, the patient can point out the exact location of this body inside the eyeball.

Injury to the retina—the seeing part of the eye—can also be made out by the patient in this way, because it appears dark to him when the rays are turned on.

Grandmother Wore Them, but They Find Many Stylish Uses Today Too

By PRUNELLA WOOD

Your own grandmother, and very likely, her grandmother, too, wore those one-piece knitted wool frocks, a feminine challenge to the rigors of winter under old-fashioned heating systems. Compact, light in weight and decorative as they are, they fit in with the life of to-day and are even rooftop restaurant, air-cooled night clubs and terrace entertaining exposes a girl in evening war paint to chilly moments.

Lower right is a model of fluffy white marabou, one of the most popular styles ever whipped up. Girls in the chaise lounge and breakfast set in bed make it double as a morning jacket. Convalescents find it an alluring piece of attire, too—and it is in the pin money price class.

At the top is a quilted velveteen number, very quaint, yet stately. It has a contrasting lining to match its bows. Its cerise velvet with black accents is chunky.

Lower left is sketched a silk and rayon velvet which is quilted with an elastic thread. It's really quite medieval in effect, and cosy in fuchsia, toast beige, black or red.

Wife Should Defer to Husband's Wishes About Her Working

(Copyright, 1938 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

DEAR MISS CHATFIELD:

We are going to be married in the early autumn and we have problems and more problems. My fiance doesn't make enough for us to live on comfortably yet he has so much foolish pride that he does not want me to continue to work. He's an only child and so am I. He's sets of parents want us to make our home with them as this is the only way they can help. I am holding out for a separate home and my fiance agrees with me, that it will be better for us to live alone. Don't you think it would be sensible for me to keep my job so we won't be always pinched for money, and don't you think we should cut loose from our parents?

SUE F. H.

ANSWER:

I think you are eminently wise in deciding to set up your own establishment, however modest it may be. But I don't think it would be sensible for you to continue to work if your fiance is opposed to it. Far better for you to be pinched for money than for you to bring to the wedding feast a crow to feed with your husband. This is what you would be doing if you kept the job.

It isn't foolish prida that makes a young man averse to his wife's working. It's manly and commendable pride which you should respect. Its will be time enough because of the struggle to support you and if you will help him by turning and twisting to make ends meet on his meager salary it will be a greater service to him than if you brought home a fat pay envelope every week.

You see a man must believe in himself to get on in the world. His ambition is all tied up with his self-esteem and the woman he loves can increase it like nobody's business. Being pinched for money is just the sort of incentive he needs to raise his earning power, provided his wife lives within his income, doesn't nag about their deprivations and cheers him on by being a good sport.

I'm quite sure that in many instances fifty-fifty marriages work like magic but it certainly true that while they solve financial problems, they frequently create other problems not so easily solved. Both men become soft and slump into bad habits when they are relieved of the responsibility to support their families. Very proud men are sometimes humiliated at seeing their wives work. (A man's pride is delicate and when it's injured he's never the same.) So it takes a lot of tactful woman to keep her husband up to scratch when she is doing part of the scratching for the family.

Asking me what to do, I'd say give up your present job when you get married and take that full-time position as homemaker, manicurist, maid of all work, believer-in and builder-upper of a proud young man.

CAROLINE CHATFIELD.

A "movie" in the real sense of the word, so packed with motion and action that it keeps the audience on the edge of its seats throughout, is "The Crowd Roars", Robert Taylor's latest stellar triumph at the Belle Theatre.

And it is a triumph for Taylor, for he provides the surprise of the year in his first prize-fight role, giving more verisimilitude to the character of Tommy "Killer" McCoy than probably any other film player who ever essayed a fight part. It's the virile, two-fisted, unmasking role that more than fulfills the promise that the star revealed in "A Yank at Oxford". He dishes it out, and how he takes it! This is easily the finest job of both acting and entertainment that Taylor has ever turned out.

Teamed with the star again is Maureen O'Sullivan, who once more shows herself the ideal romantic foil, sincere, appealing and forthright. And the unspoiled charm of these school chum, Jane Wyman, admirable as the blond rival for Taylor's affections.

If anyone could "steal" the picture from Taylor, which is well-nigh impossible so completely does he score a knockout, it would be Frankie Morgan as his father, the dissolute ex-vaudeville "ham". As Brian McCoy, Morgan is superb not only in his comedy thrill-laden "ham in the aisles," but in his dramatic delineation of all the character's potentialities. It is an acting gem.

Edward Arnold is the big-shot gambler who pulls the behind-the-arena strings; William Gargan in a memorable role as Johnny Martin, ex-light-heavyweight champ, who is killed by his former pupil, Taylor, in a comeback bout; Isabel Jewell as Gargan's wife; Lionel Stander, typical as "Happy", Taylor's trainer; Nat Pendleton as Arnold's racketeering rival, and young Gene Reynolds, outstanding as Tommy McCoy as a boy, vie so closely for supporting honors that a host of other character players can but follow in their footsteps.

To Director Richard Thorpe goes credit for the amazingly fast action, the breathless suspense and the warm romance of Author George Brown's story so potent with thrill, ballet, plaudits for investing his picture with the most authentic flavor of any right down to the core of Hollywood, and for presenting his star in a role that should win him the most enthusiastic fan following he has ever enjoyed.

Every inspiring and unusual Pete Smith oddity "Penny Party", produced in full beautiful technicolor, the Belle latest World News events and "Day at the Beach", an amusing Captain and the Kid cartoon will be presented on the same program.

Acclaimed the world over as the tenor who has inherited the mantle of Caruso, Nino Martini returns to the screen after a year's absence in a gay musical romance called "Music For Madame". With an array of tried-and-true songs from opera and new numbers by contemporary composers, and a plot set against the background of the film capital this picture coming to the McCarthy theatre promises entertainment well out of the ordinary.

three days of next week at the McCarthy theatre.

The story concerns the struggle of a young singer who came to Hollywood to court fortune. It gives Martini opportunities as a dramatic actor as well as revealing his glorious voice in a variety of song.

Martini portrays a penniless but ambitious young tenor. On arriving in Hollywood he is made an immediate victim in a jest that, singing at a big wedding reception to distract the guests' attention during the robbery, when Movietone, a famous musical impressario, is charmed by the stranger's voice and secretly arranges for him—but he's now aware that he will be arrested as an accomplice if he reveals him. self, is forced to remain hidden and fears even to sing.

From the beginning of the story swiftly progresses to one laughter-packed situation after another.

As a vehicle for the famous singing star "Music For Madame" is said to surpass "The Gay Desperado," in which Nino Martini soared to screen fame a year ago. Ila Hollywood setting provides a novel background for the fast-paced action.

Six songs feature the picture. The famous "Vesti La Giubba" from "Pagliacci," the furtive Tear from Donizetti's opera, "Elisir D'Amore" and the well-known Neapolitan fisher song "Santa Lucia" comprise the classical numbers in the film; and "Music For Madame" "Wanderer" and the theme song "I Want The World to Know" represents the modern selections, the latter two composed by Rudolf Friml.

Jean Fontaine, hailed as the outstanding feminine "discovery" of the year, has the heroine role of the production and it top features. Claude Marsh wields the dramatic conductor. The cast includes Eric Rhodes as a rival singer, Lee Patrick as Ann Revere, head-waiter-boiled room-mate, Bradley Page and Frank Conroy as a pair of crooks, Alan Hale, Billy Gilbert and Grant Mitchell in typical comedy parts and a host of other well-known character players that make "Music For Madame" such a splendid screen attraction.

John Sirpless directed the film, which was produced by Jesse L. Lasky, Cus Rahm wrote the script for Rudolf Friml's songs, and Allie Wrubel and Herb Magidson composed the "Music For Madame" number.

Edgar Kennedy in his latest comedy offering "Good Housekeeping" is an excellent all-technicolor movie cartoon entitled "Jungle Jitters" and a clever screen novelty subject "Nickel Library" will be the program in addition to "Music For Madame" at the McCarthy theatre.

"Racketeers In Exile"

George Bancroft, Jean Arthur, Tenahis and Wynne Gibson in the dramatic hit "Racketeers In Exile. The progressive hit at the McCarthy theatre for the last three days today, Tuesday and Wednesday.

For more than twenty years Madame Frances Alda was one of the stars of the Metropolitan Opera, friend and colleague of Toscanini, Caruso, Mary Garden and many others. She married Gatti-Casazza, managing director of the Metropolitan and knew something of the managing as well as the artistic side of musical life. Madame Alda sets down her memories and opinions, her likes and dislikes with great tact and discretion in her autobiography "Men, Women and Tenors". Her observations are sometimes amusing and frank.
